SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE new year opens with the announcement of the universal tranquillity of British India, which has been repeated by every successive mail for many months past. The fruits of this state of political repose are beginning to appear. Roads are being made or restored, canals reopened, and the Government, we are told by the Delhi paper, consider the subjugation of the Punjab so complete, that they have thrown open the ranks of the army to all classes of the population, Sikh,—Hindu, and Musulman. "The regiments stationed in the country of the Five Rivers are to recruit wholly from the Punjabis, and, in a short time, we may expect to hear that thousands, who fought under Runjeet Singh and the Attaree chieftains, are eating the salt of the Company Bahadur. The resolve is a wise one. It will insure the peace of our new acquisitions, and deal an effectual blow to the religion of Govind, the most potent antagonism which has crossed the path of British supremacy in the East."

In order to bridle the Afreedees and their fellow marauders, a small force, consisting of the 2nd Punjab Irregular Infantry, 100 Suwars and two guns, under Capt. Vaughan, has been posted at Nuree, on the road from Kohat to Bunoo.

A Calcutta journal understands that, in consequence of the unsettled state of the country on the frontiers of Assam, a detachment of troops was to be despatched forthwith to the spot; the followers of the border chiefs having assembled to the number of some four or five thousand. This intelligence is supposed by the other papers to be erroneous or exaggerated.

The sickness (fever and dysentery) prevailing in the stations of the Punjab and in Upper India, though it was somewhat abating, continued to be severe. The Delhi Gazette, of November 24th, regrets to say, that the three regiments stationed at Delhi are totally disorganized for all purposes of discipline, in consequence of the prevailing malady. "Parades and drill are out of the question, as the slightest exertion sends the men back to hospital. The general complaint is, that they cannot gather strength. The fever leaves them only to return at slight intervals. As yet, the mortality has not been very great, but the percentage of deaths, for the year ending in June next, will be found far higher than usual. The work of disease has commenced, and in too many instances we shall hear of its speedy completion."

At Lahore, the garrison, 7,500, had 1,200 in hospital. A letter from Meean Meer, dated 14th November, says:—

"The 1st fusiliers still continue to be very sickly, and on an average lose a man daily. They are now encamped near Meean Meer, but the change from their former encampment has in no way benefited them at present, and dysentery is creating sad havoc in the regiment. It has been strongly recommended that the fusiliers be moved to another station, but, in all probability, Government will not listen to it. Sickness at Meean Meer is gradually decreasing, though the hospitals are still tolerably full; very few, either officers or privates, have escaped."

This regiment (the 1st European Fusiliers), out of 819 efficient men, had 264 on the sick-list. Letters from Mooltan convey more satisfactory tidings concerning the health of its inhabitants. Sickness is greatly on the decline, but many, who have been seriously ill, were still suffering from debility, which seems slow to leave them. The hospitals for the native regiments are rapidly advancing. The fort is said to have been the most healthy locality at Mooltan during the past season. In cantonments almost every officer has been once or twice attacked by fever.

At Peshawur, according to the latest advices, the malady prevailed amongst the European troops to an alarming extent. In the 98th regt. the average loss was a man a day, and the 61st were equally unfortunate.

A letter from Loodianah informs us that the 1st Europeans had 360 men and nine officers on the sick list.

The Governor-General had crossed the Beas, and reached Deenanuggur on the 16th November, attended by a numerous staff. They were to be at Lahore on the 26th or 27th. The Marquess was to have a grand meeting with Golab Sing, the King of Cashmere, at Wuzerabad. The Calcutta journals speak with admiration of the exquisite workmanship of the silver-mounted howdah, executed for the occasion at that presidency.

Sir C. Napier's arrangements had been all perfected, and he had commenced his movements homeward. He quitted Simla on the 17th November; on the 18th he presented new colours to her Majesty's 22nd Foot at Dugshai, which he left on the 21st for Ferozepore, where he would remain until the arrival of his successor in India, when he would embark on the Sutlej for Kurrachee and Bombay.

"There is a rumour current," says the Bombay Times,—

"Whether it be well or ill founded we are ignorant—that matters have of late been waxing more than ordinarily warm betwixt the Governor-General and the Commander-in-Chief in India. When the order to refund the Scinde prize-money was originally issued, our Bengal contemporaries assured us that Sir Charles Napier could on no account make up his mind to give back a shilling of the coin stained red with the blood of Meance, which he had wiped and put in his pocket.* The suspension of the refund order seemed for a time to have got the better of the difficulty,—when its re-issue makes matters a thousand times more nauseous than before. Refund is now infinitely worse than the double trouble Falstaff complained of, and he 'will brook no surrender.' On the other hand, the Governor-General will endure no resistance to the orders of Government on the part of any one, however exalted: the cut of the pay and allowances during the remainder of the Chief's sojourn will not, it is said, meet the demands of the refund:—yet refund there must be,—so that, if the tale that has been told us be true, we have as pretty a case of fix as need be! Then Sir W. Gomm will be out directly, and will doubtless be sworn in the moment he arrives; so that Sir Charles cannot even extend his term of service to make up the amount."

It does not appear that the affairs of the Nizam are to receive the benefit that would result from the appointment of Shums-ool-Omra to the ministry. That nobleman had refused the precarious post, but had suggested a measure of relief, in the shape of a forced loan or contribution, which, with the sale of his highness's jewels, would suffice to discharge his obligation to the Company. A letter from Hyderabad describes the preparations making to receive the Madras Commander-in-Chief as somewhat unusual:

"A squadron of the splendid cavalry of the contingent force has been detached, under the command of Lieut. J. Campbell, to meet Sir George Berkeley. The Nizam is described as being in a state of apathy, at once remarkable and unseasonable, at the crisis that appears to impend over him. His Highness, however, probably anticipates a much easier fate than that which so many of our contemporaries have cut out for him, viz., absorption and a state pension."

The Presidential intelligence is but scanty; the items will be found under their proper heads. The Bengal Railway has been actually commenced. The natives, it seems, were alarmed at the summary mode of dealing with their property, and as the Act for enabling the Railway Company to occupy land for its purposes has not yet become law, the zemindars had threatened actions.

The Governor of Bombay had returned to the presidency from Mahabuleswar, where he had been since the middle of September for the recovery of his health, which appears to be entirely restored. The Commander-in-Chief, Sir W. Cotton, was at Bombay, waiting to be relieved by Sir John Grey.

The Singapore papers now inform us that Sir J. Brooke's mission to Siam had terminated without effecting its object. His demands are stated to have been very moderate, amounting to little more than the protection for European merchants which was stipulated in the former treaty; but it appears that everything has been refused, in an insolent and hostile tone.

The Cape journals announce the arrival of the Governor at King William's Town, on the 20th October; and that from what came under his observation on the road, the Caffres, consisting of a portion of the tribes of Umhala and Pato, were in a state of perfect tranquillity. A "Government notice," dated the 21st October, states that "the accounts which his Excellency has received from Colonel Mackinnon are of the most satisfactory nature. A great meeting of all the chiefs and influential men will take place at King William's Town in a few days. The kind of panic which has lately prevailed among the farmers on some parts of the frontier is as much to be regretted as the cause for such excitement was unfounded. While some of the Caffre servants were, it is true, leaving their masters, the T'Slambie and Gaika Commissioners were receiving daily applications for employment within the colony."

BENGAL.

CASE OF MAJOR BARTLEMAN, 44th BENGAL N.I.

The following summary of this case is given by the Bombay Times :—

Mrs. Shelton was the daughter of Dr. Laughton, formerly a teacher at Simla, and who in this capacity had laid Major Bartleman under obligations to him by the care he had taken of a sickly boy. She had been for some years married to Lieut. Shelton. The union, of which several children had been the fruits, appears of late to have been an unhappy one, and the quarrels in the family were frequent and notorious. In January last the unhappy couple were the guests of Major Bartleman, to whom before this they had been but slightly known; and while such, the conduct of the husband to his wife and host was occasionally such as to induce him to volunteer a full written apology to the latter for what had occurred. In February he proceeded to Singapore on sick leave, for the benefit of his health, leaving his wife behind him at Calcutta, where she appeared to prefer residing alone, although she had friends at no great distance. About this time she wrote to her father, complaining of her husband's ill-usage, and appeared desirous of a separation. Dr. Laughton wrote in reply, under cover to Major Bartleman, exhorting his daughter to a reconciliation, and entreating her to use her best endeavours to soothe the mind and regain the affections of her husband. He reminded her that her lot had now been cast with his, and that nothing but extreme necessity should ever induce her to think of leaving him. To Major Bartleman, who was his senior, and had been twice a widower, and might therefore have been supposed capable of being entrusted with such a charge, he wrote, thanking him for the kindness he had shown his daughter, and committing her in case of extremity to his protection. Lieut. Shelton was repeatedly written to by Major Bartleman during his absence, and the circumstances mentioned that he had taken Mrs. Shelton to a ball, and was in the habit of driving out with her in the morning, adding, that he had recommended her to join her friends at Kishnagur, but that she preferred apparently sojourning at Calcutta. Mr. Shelton returned from Singapore early in July, but does not appear to have expressed any dissatisfaction with the conduct of his wife. On the 16th of August Major Bartleman wrote him a note, declining the continuance of his acquaintance, on what grounds does not appear, and Mr. Shelton expressed his regret at the loss of his friendship. Friendly relations betwixt the parties seem soon afterwards to have been renewed. On the 22nd, and again on the 23rd of August, Major Bartleman drove Mrs. Shelton in his buggy from Barrackpore to Calcutta, by invitation of her husband. On the latter of these days, Mr. Shelton found on his wife's pillow a letter addressed to her by Major Bartleman, such as a devoted husband might have written to his wife—such as none but an accepted lover would have written to his mistress. The unhappy couple immediately proceeded to Calcutta to consult a lawyer as to what was to be done. On their return they met with Major Bartleman; high words passed between them, when the Major preceded them on horseback to their home, and there awaited their arrival. The husband forbade his entrance—the wife accepted his arm. When inside, he was repeatedly ordered to the door; he persisted in remaining, as he wished to have some explanations with Mrs. Shelton. Mr. Shelton rushed to his bedroom and brought out a pistol, which he snapped at Major Bartleman. That officer seized him, wrested the pistol from his hand, pushed him down, and beat him with a whip; the table was upset in the scuffle; aid was called for in vain, and a fearful scene, apparently in the presence of the lady, ensued. The pistol turned out to have been loaded—it was fired off by Major Bartleman, whose life just before had been so nearly jeopardized. Having quitted the house at length; he soon after returned, and placed Mr. Shelton under arrest. Some hours after this, he induced Col. Pettingal, commanding the 33rd, to permit the arrest to be removed, a fresh arrest having been imposed by this officer immediately afterwards. A circumstance very material to the character of the intercourse between the parties came out on the examination—that on the 22nd of August, the day before the letter was written, the discovery of which first awakened suspicion in the mind of the husband, and led to the explosion, Major Bartleman had put himself into the hands of his law adviser, who had engaged counsel to defend the action he expected to be brought against him in the civil court.

COTTON.

No wonder the cotton trade cannot thrive in India when the cultivation is carried on under a vexatious system of Government interference. When we noticed, a short time ago, the prohibitory order of the collector at Broach against exporting cotton with the seed in it, we supposed that the zeal of the public officer had carried him a little beyond the strict line of his duty; but the Bombay Times has put the saddle upon the right horse in the following paragraph :—

"The Calcutta Englishman censures Mr. Davies, collector at Broach, for the late cotton seizures, and does not appear to recollect that these have been made under the authority of an Act of the Legislative Council, which Mr. Davies dared not, without dereliction of duty, have neglected. The Act directs that the cotton shall be confiscated and destroyed should such be deemed expedient; and we only regret that half the sentence at all events was not carried into effect, and that the cotton, instead of being detained till cleaned, should not have been confiscated and sold for the public good—the proceeds of this and all similar sales to be expended in improving the means of communication in the cotton districts."

We recommend the above paragraph to the earnest attention of the men of Manchester. We have always told them that the real obstacle to a supply of cotton being furnished from this country, was the Company's revenue system, and that all the parade of encouragement given to exotic varieties by model farms, American gins, and American planters was a mere delusion. Here we find that the cultivator is prohibited by an Act of the Legislative Council from taking his produce to market, unless he will prepare it in such manner as the Government shall please to order. What more is required to destroy the most flourishing agriculture in the world? Could an English farmer grow wheat under such restrictions? — Englishman, Nov. 12.

It must here be remembered, that the Act applies to cotton intentionally adulterated for fraudulent purposes—that is, with the view of swindling the purchaser out of his money, by giving him dirt or water amongst the material he pays for as cotton. The Manchester men must be the most stupid fellows that can be imagined, for they have already, not only cordially approved of the measure intended to protect them from swindling, but on frequent occasions applied to Government to have it more stringently than heretofore put in force. There was, indeed, for a time a sort of recriminatory discussion on the matter, and the Bombay merchants complained that Government would not enforce the law; Government officers blamed the merchants for not assisting them in enforcing it: both were agreed as to the desirableness of its enforcement.—Bombay Times, Nov. 23.

DISCOVERY OF SILVER ORES.

A highly important discovery was communicated to the Asiatic Society at its last meeting. After the report of the curator of the Museum of Economic Geology had been read, that gentleman, by special permission from the deputy-governor (as he stated), read to the meeting a public letter, from which it appears that, after twenty years of patient research, he had at length found in the rubbish of the Deoghur copper mines the singular ores of silver called in Peru the Pacos, and in Mexico the Colorados, which, though they contain silver in such inappreciable portions, that it is only extractable to a profit by the curious Spanish process of amalgamation, as carried on in those countries, yet forms the staple of the richest Mexican mines, from its vast abundance.

Specimens of the ore, and of those from Mexico and Peru, as well as of the silver extracted from the Indian specimens, were shown, and Mr. Piddington added, that though the season had prevented his obtaining from Captain Sherwill more than a small additional supply, yet he had been able, by picking out every fragment from amongst the rest of the ores, to collect a pound weight of it, which, wrought by the Mexican amalgamation process, with which he is, it would seem, familiar, he had obtained a good average produce from a mere surface specimen.

The discovery is one of high mineralogical importance, for it shows that like causes have been at work to produce the same effects, and the only question is now to what extent. It would be curious indeed, if, just as the relative value of the precious metals is changing by the influx of California gold, India was to appear in the market as producing silver, and that the first discovery of it should be within 200 miles of Calcutta, after a patient research which has rarely been equalled in the annals of scientific perseverance, and that the practicability of extracting the metal in such minute portions, and by the cheap Mexican process, should at once be demonstrated with its discovery. — Englishman, Nov. 21.

FEMALE LIFE IN BENGAL.

A sketch has been furnished to us by a native friend, of highly respectable family, of the life of a female of the upper classes in Bengal:—

"The first years of a female infant in Bengal form a period of unalloyed happiness, but of total indolence. She is the plaything of a doting mother, and the pet of the house. Exercises which invigorate the frame and add grace and strength to the limbs, form no part of her amusements at this or at any subsequent period. Her chief delight consists in playing with a set of clay dolls, covered with wax, which she arranges and rearranges in the compartments of a square wooden frame. At seven she ought to be given in marriage. If she remain unmarried over the age of ten, her father is held to incur the crime of murdering her offspring.

"Marriages are generally negotiated through a species of brokers called Ghutukus. The ceremonies of the celebration of the nuptials last several days; their mystic meaning being understood by none of the parties engaged therein. After her marriage, the Hindu female resides alternatively at the house of her husband and father, but principally during the first two or three years at that of the latter. The female apartments where she spends her time are, owing to the Hindu custom of living in united families, as populous as rabbit-warrens, and the early years of the bride are spent in playing with children of her own sex and age; of course in complete seclusion from the world without, and without the remotest attempt at education being made. The servants, who have the privilege denied to her of going abroad into the world, now obtain a great influence over her mind. They supply her gossip, often not of the most decent kind. Dressing and displaying her ornaments to her companions supplies another of her principal amusements. And the ever-recurring idle ceremonies with which each epoch of her own existence and that of the numerous members of the joint family is marked to fill up the remainder of her time.

"When she becomes a mother, we view her in a more interesting light. The Hindu woman presents a beautiful picture of the most devoted parental fondness. She lives but for her children. Their sorrows and wants, their comforts and amusements, engage her entire attention. Days and nights she watches by their sick couch, and macerates herself with fasts and austerities to avert from them imaginary evils. She pets them, prays for them, watches for them, starves for them, and would even die for them. She does everything but educate them; that she is incapable of, except in so far as education extends to the inculcation of the importance of a variety of superstitious and degrading ceremonies, of which her maternal solicitude leads her most sedulously to exact the observance.

"That portion of her time which is not monopolized by her children she spends in superintending the preparation of the family food. During a meal she never sits down with her male relations, but waits upon them, and officiously supplies their wants; it is not till long after they have concluded their repast that she satisfies her own hunger."—Citizen.

GAMBLING IN THE CIVIL SERVICE.

We are rejoiced that the Lieut.-Governor, Mr. Thomason, has addressed a circular letter to all the commissioners, in reference to the late gambling transaction at Simla, in which he desires them, by every means in their power, to discountenance whatever propensity to gambling may exist among their subordinates. The commissioners are directed, in the first place, to use mild and earnest remonstrance; if that fails, the transgressor is to be removed forthwith to some other station in the division. Should the practice be still persisted in, a report will be made without delay to the Lieut.-Governor, and from the stringency of these injunctions, we may anticipate the vigour of his proceedings towards the delinquent. These orders reflect the highest credit on the Lieut.-Governor, and will, we have no doubt, be successful in eradicating the vice, in the few instances in which it exists. We are happy to be able to state, from extensive experience, that the vice is exceedingly rare among the members of the civil service, so rare that every one who indulges in the propensity, is known throughout the service, and is, in some respects, a marked man. It would be perfectly superfluous to attempt to show, what must indeed be self-evident, that the indulgence of this villainous habit is utterly incompatible with the independence, and consequently the efficiency, of those who sustain the responsibilities of civil office in the public administration, and that government cannot be too severe in reprobating and discouraging it. We think it may be so easily eradicated from among them, that the continued existence of it in any case may be considered a token of the weakness of government. The duty which is now thrown on the commissioners by the Lieutenant-Governor, implies that they are themselves well acquainted with the character and propensities of the young civilians in their respective divisions, and maintain a constant and salutary check on their proceedings. It is much to be doubted, however, whether this has universally been recognized among the responsibilities of their office, although it must be considered among the most important as well as the most agreeable of their duties, thus to superintend the moral as well as official tuition of the young civilian, and endeavour to correct those propensities which tend to the deterioration of his character and his prospects. There is the clearest evidence of an increasing disposition on the part of Government to enforce this duty on the commissioners, and to lead them to regard their position, in reference to the youths under their control, as analogous to those which devolve on the commanding officer of a regiment, in connection with his own junior officers. Gambling in the Civil Service, though happily rare, has not been confined to the North-west provinces. The deputy-governor of Bengal must have heard of some such cases within his own beat, and it is therefore greatly to be desired that a similar injunction was issued from the Bengal office to the commissioners in the lower provinces.—Friend of India.

THE GANGES CANAL.

The Friend of India has a notice of Colonel Cauley's "theory of percolation," with reference to the injury river navigation may sustain from the Ganges canal when that undertaking is in full operation. Our contemporary withholds details which we are now enabled to supply, premising that we have to offer nothing which is not already known to engineer officers familiar with the North West Provinces, except a notice of some recent experiments at Delhi, Muttra, and Agra, upon the influence of the Jumna canals on the navigation of that river. Our information is mainly derived from the reports of Colonel Cauley, not generally accessible, and from those of other officers who have been, in like manner, employed in the canal districts.

The following conclusions are drawn from experiments. That the higher the water is in the Jumna, the less is the surface of the river effected by the abstraction of water for the canal supply; that the canals only affect the Jumna when that river is low, and that the maximum affection occurs in the latter part of the cold weather, and in the early part of March.

Then, as percolation maintains the navigable character of the Jumna, its extent will bear the same ratio to the original volume of the Ganges, both rivers flowing over beds having the same geological structure. As 4,000 cubic feet (the discharge of the Jumna at the canal heads) is to 1,861 cubic feet (the river opposite Agra, less the Hindun), so is 8,000 cubic feet (the Ganges above Hurdwar) to 3,722 cubic feet (that river opposite Futtyghur). In short, if the Ganges canal bunds laid the river bed south of Hurdwar perfectly dry, the supply at Cawnpore, independent of five large tributaries, would be 3,722 cubic feet per second. "To those who maintain that the supply for the Ganges Canal will affect the navigation of the river below Allahabad, I have no argument to offer," says Col. Cauley writing in 1845, "but refer them to Arrowsmith's map of India, with the configuration of the drainage of the Gangetic valley, and the proportion borne by the line under discussion with that of the numerous tributaries extending from the Himalayas to the Bay of Bengal."—Hurkaru, Nov. 23.

ROADS.

The social economics of India are so varying and anomalous, that one cannot wonder at the conflicting statements which find their way into the home journals. It is established beyond dispute, that, in all the well-known districts of Upper India, the wants of a large and rapidly increasing population are fast outstripping the agricultural resources of the country. Pasture land is almost as valuable as the cultivated soil, and in a short time every patch of available surface will be brought under the plough. But whilst this state of things prevails in general, there are districts in which grain is ridiculously cheap, and hardly known as an article of export. At Jaloun, in Bundelkund, only 65 miles from Cawnpore, grain is selling at this moment at 110 seers the rupee, and wheat and other cereals at corresponding rates. The zemindars are too poor to export on their own account, and do not know how to open up intercourse with the Bunniahs of the large towns. This fact would form a very feasible charge in the voluminous bill of indictment preparing against the Company. Contiguous districts labour, the one under a plethora, the other under a comparative scarcity of food, and there are no means of equalizing the gifts of Providence. An insuperable barrier, if not raised by the Government, is allowed to exist, and to shut out the inter-communication between neighbouring tribes, who might do each other essential service. Ah well! the reproach, if ever deserved, will soon be wiped away. Good roads are being made all over Jaloun, and, except in the rainy season, heavy laden carts may now travel with ease to any part from the Doab, Jahneer, Gwalior, &c., and little by little, but still constantly, as circumstances will admit, the superintendent, Captain Erskine, is busy in metalling highways and erecting bridges. Say that Jaloun is no better known to the inhabitants of Cawnpore at this moment, than was Devonshire to the people of Middlesex fifty years since, and that for this ignorance the British Government is in some degree accountable, yet balance against it the atoning fact, that only a short time since, under the rule of the Mahratas, the land that is now a field of waving grain was a howling wilderness, and the Company need no further defence.—Delhi Gaz., Nov. 24.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE UNION BANK.—Public attention has been recalled to the wreck of the Union Bank by a discovery lately made in the Supreme Court, and which it is thought may lead to very important results. It has been found that the verification of the register of shareholders filed in 1847, was signed, not by Mr. Grant, the master of the court, but in his absence by Mr. Holroyd, who affixed Mr. Grant's name, believing himself authorized by the court so to do. The validity of the signature is now doubted, and should these doubts be declared well-grounded, the effect will be to cancel the register of 1847, and to establish the liability of shareholders whose names appear on the previous register, filed in 1846.—Hurkaru, Nov. 21.

The Judges, we hear, think the signature valid; but grave doubts are entertained on the subject by other parties, and as there are some good substantial men on the Memorial of 1846, who were not partners at the time of the final catastrophe, it is supposed that some creditors will immediately attack them, and as they did not come in under the Act passed after the failure, they are still liable for the whole deficiency, if liable at all.—Englishman, Nov. 24.

COURTS-MARTIAL.—Lieut. R. F. Fanshawe of the Invalid Establishment at Chunar, has been brought to a court-martial for alleged defalcations.—Delhi Gaz. Nov. 24.

A court-martial is ordered to try a young officer of the 59th N.I., upon certain grave charges preferred against him by an officer of the same corps.—Ibid. Nov. 16.

We have some reason to believe that another court-martial is likely to arise out of the highly unbecoming feuds that have, it appears, not been put down in the 48th N.I.—Lahore Chron., Nov. 13.

Other trials are stated to be pending or in progress.

THE N.W. BANK.—The directors of the N.W. Bank have published the following notice:—"In consequence of the discovery of deficiencies, carried on by apparent fictitious entries in the books of the bank, as detailed below, and made under authority of Major Angelo's own hand-writing, to the extent of Rs. 1,12,520. 5. 9, exclusive of interest, the directors of the N.W. Bank of India have deemed it imperative on them to suspend Major Angelo from his office of secretary and agent, have sent the deputy secretary, Mr. C. B. Wood, to take charge of the Calcutta agency; have called their Mussoorie agent to Meerut, to take charge of the bank, and direct Major Angelo to return to Meerut. The directors have called on Major Angelo's securities to be prepared to meet deficiencies to the extent of their bond; they will also adopt every lawful measure to secure the bank from ultimate loss."

The overland Delhi Gazette, in its observations upon this announcement, says: "We have been expecting up to the hour of going to press to hear the 'rights' of the story about the alleged defalcations of Major Angelo, but nothing has been added to the strange statement put forward in the first place by the directors, and that is wholly irreconcilable with common sense notions. Can we believe the tale of Major Angelo's misdemeanour? We cannot,—as the directors have told it. A little time will suffice to clear up the mystery; but our present impression is, that the asserted defalcation is simply a debt, concealed from the proprietors, with the knowledge of the directors who were in office when the false entries were made."

COAL COMPANY.—At the annual general meeting of the shareholders of the Bengal Coal Company, held on the 12th November, a dividend of 6 per cent. per annum was declared. We have not space this week for a more detailed account, but the amount of coal brought down during the year was upwards of twelve lacs of maunds, and the total receipts of the company, including an advance of Rs. 83,000 on account of the Government, amounted to Rs. 6,42,121.

CAPTAIN JOHN BRACKEN, of the 29th N.I. who died at Simla on the 10th November, of typhus fever, was offg. Dep. Adjt. Gen. of the army. He was third son of the late Rev. T. Bracken, of Ickenham and of St. James's, Westminster. He possessed excellent natural abilities, improved by extensive reading, but was, perhaps, most distinguished for sound, honest, independent judgment. Having been repeatedly obliged to return to England for the benefit of his health, he had mixed more in European society than falls to the lot of most officers of this army. He was well versed, and took a deep interest, in the great political questions of his native country; and nearly twenty years ago, when liberal opinions were neither so safe nor so fashionable as now, he being on furlough at Liverpool, took an active part in the agitation which resulted in the triumph of reform principles in that town. For his services on this occasion, the reformers at Liverpool, including the most influential gentlemen of the place, subscribed and presented to him a handsome present of plate and books, a high compliment, when it is understood that Captain Bracken was at that time an utter stranger in Liverpool. Captain Bracken was twice married; first to a daughter of the late Sir Herbert Compton, and a second time to the eldest daughter of the late Egerton Smith, of Liverpool, who survives to mourn his loss; he also leaves four children; the eldest is an officer in the army. The deceased was well known to a large circle of friends in India, by whom he will be deeply regretted. From his robust frame and regular habits, a lengthened career in the honourable field of staff employ lately opened to him, might have been confidently reckoned upon, but it has been ordained otherwise. Captain Bracken's active service in the field was confined to the skirmish of last winter in the Kohat Pass, whither he accompanied the Commander-in-Chief as 1st Assistant-Adjutant-General.—Delhi Gazette, Nov. 16.

BALLOONS.—Mr. Kight, the aeronaut, who ascended from Calcutta on the 5th November, descended the same day near Baraset, where he was hospitably entertained. Mr. Kight has published a narrative of his ascent in his balloon, which differs from the narratives hitherto published in respect to his treatment by the natives. It appears that the peasantry, undismayed by the possibility of his being an incarnation, positively refused to pull the ropes attached to the balloon, to assist him in his descent, until Mr. Kight had promised them twenty-five rupees. They subsequently tried to cut out the silk of the balloon, and finally refused to help him in transporting it to Baraset, without a reward of four rupees to each man. The anecdote is an apt illustration of the feelings of a people who invariably compel a drowning man to bribe them to take him on board.

CENTRALIZATION.—The Delhi Gazette relates an amusing instance of the effects of our Indian system of centralization. A lieutenant-colonel had disbursed the sum of four annas (sixpence) on public service, the vouchers for which he had unfortunately lost, and was ordered to refund the money. Not choosing to submit to what he deemed an injustice, the lieutenant-colonel commenced a correspondence which cost five letters on foolscap paper, all transmitted at the public expense, and all occupying official time.

COPPER IN THE PUNJAB.—We have been favoured with the following from the Deputy Commissioner of Leia:—"You will be glad to hear that specimens of copper have been found far exceeding our expectations. I sent some to Dr. Fleming, at Dehra Ghazee Khan, who has in the most obliging manner assisted me in examining specimens, and giving me information regarding minerals, which I had neither time nor opportunity to collect for myself. His talents as a mineralogist, geologist, and chemist are well known, which must give value to his opinions."—Delhi Gaz. Nov. 24.

H. MAJESTY'S 22ND REGIMENT.—Sir Charles Napier presented new colours to this corps, at Dughai, on the 18th. We have not been favoured with a copy of His Excellency's speech on the occasion, but we are told that it was very much to the purpose, and that the whole scene was a very imposing one. Sir Charles was to have left Dughai on the 21st.—Ibid.

MR. E. THORNTON.—A Lahore correspondent states that an attempt has lately been made on the life of Mr. Edward Thornton, the commissioner of Jhelum, by administering poison; fortunately it was not retained sufficiently long on the stomach to take effect. One Kurrum Bux is in custody, charged with the crime.

THE SIMLA GAMBLING CASE.—Mr. McClure, in answer to Mr. Lang's letter, has produced a statement, drawn up by Lieut. Sladen, H.A., declaring that the gentlemen who attended the meeting expressed themselves perfectly satisfied with Mr. McClure's explanation. Mr. McClure winds up his reply by a letter signed by twenty-five gentlemen, residing at Meerut, expressing their confidence in his uprightness and honourable character.

INTOXICATION AMONGST THE SIKHS.—Subadar Subar Singh, a native officer of the 1st Sikh Local Infantry, has been tried by a court-martial for drunkenness, and sentenced to suspension from rank, pay, and allowances, for four months. The difficulty of restraining drunkenness is one which has never been felt in the native army: the sepoys being almost invariably abstemious, but we anticipate great obstructions in this respect in the Sikh regiments. The Sikhs, properly so called, are perhaps the greatest drunkards in the world, and drink has, unfortunately, the same effect upon them that ganja has upon a Malay,—it throws them into a state of insane fury.—Friend of India.

ROADS.—The Mofussilite states, that the new road from Kalka to Tibet, 180 miles in length, is now almost completed. It is scarcely a year since it was first marked out by Major Kennedy, and the rapidity with which it has been executed, so different from the general routine of Indian works, is highly creditable to the activity and exertions of that able officer.

ON-DITS.—The following appointments have been made consequent on the demise of the late Capt. J. Bracken:—Capt. W. A. J. Mayhew, 2nd Assist. Adj. General, to be 1st Assist. Adj. General, and to officiate as Dep. Adj. General during the absence of Lieut.-Colonel Chester. Capt. Septimus Becher, officiating Assist. Adj. General, to be 2nd Assist. Adj. General. Lieut. Edwin B. Johnson, Dep. Judge Advocate General, Sirhind division, to officiate as Assist. Adj. General, and Major E. Wiggins, 52nd regt. N.I., to officiate at Umballah as Dep. Judge Advocate General. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Curtis, 37th Bengal N.I., receives Rs. 30,000 from his regiment for retiring. This officer is a regimental captain. The promotions consequent on the death of Major Gen. Durant go in the 62nd N.I. Major Richardson, of the new promotion, retires, and the Hon. Capt. Byng obtains his majority after a service of only sixteen years.

STRANGE MILITARY OFFENCE.—General orders contain a record of one of those singular courts-martial which could never have occurred except in India. A Mussulman ressalidar was charged with having killed a cow in the lines of his regiment, and thereby insulted the religious prejudices of the "woordee major," a Hindoo. The Court found him guilty, and sentenced him to dismissal; upon which the Commander-in-Chief makes the following remarks:—"I see such marked animosity evident in all the native evidence, that I entertain great doubts regarding the truth of all their statements. I cannot acquit the prisoner of having acted culpably to a great extent. At the same time he had leave from his commanding officer to sacrifice the cows, on condition that they were to be killed outside of the cantonment limits, and the prisoner complied with that order. So far, then, as military discipline is concerned, he is guiltless. But supposing him to have been guilty of all the charges, as the court think, and which I do not believe to be the case; still it would be a hard measure of justice to dismiss a brave officer, who has served with honour for fifty years, because he so far forgot his duty as to join in religious animosity. I therefore commute the prisoner's sentence to suspension for six months, and he is, in the presence of all the officers, to acknowledge he was wrong to write the petition to me, dated 5th June, 1850, and also he is to beg pardon of the wordee major for the language used therein as regards the said wordee major."

THE RAILWAY.—The Calcutta Chronicle learns, that the "first sod" of the Great Indian Railway has been actually turned; and the work commenced in right earnest. Trees, plants, houses, that seemed to have fallen within the line of the expected railroad, are now being removed, and the inhabitants of the neighbouring villages at Ballee, Wooterparah, Sulkeah, &c., are loud in their complaints, as no compensation is now offered them for the injuries sustained in consequence. The local magistrates, say they, do not entertain complaints preferred against the railway pioneers, but recommend them to apply to Government on the subject of the damages done.

The Hurkaru states, that the railway contractors have already cleared the line between Howrah and Serampore, but heavy complaints are made by the native population, whose property, it seems, has been sacrificed without due notice, and in a very harsh manner. "In one case even a poor woman in the agonies of childbirth was denied one night's delay. We would fain hope that these accounts are grossly exaggerated. The worst feature of the case as represented, is that no record is kept of the injury to individuals, so that it will be difficult for them to obtain compensation."

THE RECHNA DOAB CANAL project is all but finished. Sickness has caused much delay. The collection of materials is going on; but, until the decision of the Governor-General is known, of course nothing can be settled.—Delhi Gazette, Nov. 24.

Mr. Wood, it is said, is to supersede Major Angelo in the management of the Calcutta branch of the North-western Bank.

COOLIES.—The Calcutta Morning Chronicle notices the arrival here of an agent to superintend the emigration of coolies to the West India Islands. He is anxious to obtain stouter men than those hitherto sent. 5,000 men, the Citizen says, will be required this year. The same paper states, that out of 120,000 coolies that emigrated to the Mauritius, about 20,000 have returned in good circumstances.

THE BISHOP OF CALCUTTA left Calcutta on the 11th Novem., on a tour of visitation to the eastward. It is supposed that he will return in about ten weeks.

THE POSTAL INQUIRY COMMISSIONERS of the three presidencies had sent in their several reports, and were about to meet at Calcutta to confer with each other and the Supreme Government as to the measures to be finally adopted. In the course of the inquiry, it has been ascertained that, in the Bombay presidency, the post free packets, franked "on service" by the servants of Government who enjoy that right, constitute 70 per cent. of the total weight of the mails. The newspapers, which scarcely pay for their own carriage, 20 per cent., and the private letters only 10 per cent.

JURISDICTION OF MOFUSSIL MAGISTRATES.—A circular order of the Nizamut Adawlut publishes the legal opinion of the Advocate General regarding the jurisdiction of Mofussil Magistrates in cases of assault by one European British subject upon another European British subject. It is that—"A Mofussil Magistrate cannot proceed under statute 53, Geo. 3, c. 153, s. 105, inasmuch as that section applies only to complaints made by natives against British subjects; but I am of opinion that the Magistrate has jurisdiction to take penal recognizance, and proceed under the provision of Act 5 of 1848.

THE MAHAMUREE IN THE PROVINCE OF KUMAON.—Dr. Renny's very able report, regarding the Mahamuree sickness in the Gurwal hills, has been highly thought of by the superior medical authorities, and forwarded to the Government of Agra, by whom it will, in all probability, soon be published. It appears, in addition to the sketch we have already given of this formidable disease in June, that Dr. Renny's report fixes the first breaking-out of the plague in the year 1823, at a spot no great distance from Kedarnath, in the higher range of the Himalayas. It also made great ravages in 1834, and 1837; in 1847 it advanced nearer Almora, disappeared again, and broke out, as already recorded, in 1849, continuing more or less prevalent till July, 1850. The whole of the districts formerly infected are said to be now free from the disease. We look forward with much satisfaction to Dr. Renny's report, and trust his experience will have been able to suggest some more effectual remedies than those hitherto adopted.—Lahore Chron. Nov. 13.

BRICK-MAKING IN INDIA.—An experiment, in many respects of great value, has been made by Col. Cautley, at Roorkee. He has demonstrated that machinery can be made cheaper in India than in England, and worked with equal advantage. Like most other improvers, he was stimulated at the outset by the pressure of necessity, and achieved a great good in trying to overcome evil. The masonry works on the Ganges Canal, in the immediate neighbourhood of Roorkee, required for their completion, in round numbers, 1,000 lacs of bricks. The period fixed for the completion of these works was six years: a quantity of bricks therefore equal to 166 or 170 lacs was required annually. Col. Cautley purchased a couple of machines for making bricks; but the first, Ainslie's patent, was found not to succeed. He then tried Hall's invention. The machine was set up in October, 1848, and placed in charge of Serjeant Durrant, whose first object was to learn to work it himself; this he very soon accomplished, and he then taught a party of bildars how to use it; but owing to the stupidity and awkwardness of these men, the machine was continually breaking for the first six months after it was set in progress; the frequent stoppages to our work on that account were very disheartening; nevertheless, Serjeant Durrant persevered in his endeavours to give the machine a fair trial; he encouraged the bildars, with whom he occasionally took a spell at the wheel, and the results have been, that we had the satisfaction of seeing it work on steadily for the last three months, and of counting 11,670 bricks made by it in one day, which is about equal to the best turn-out obtained in England or America from a similar machine. The cost of the largest-sized bricks by the machine is Rs. 90-0-10 per lac, a rate which shows an enormous saving as compared with the results of manual labour. The machine cost 96l. in England, and when set up and ready for working, Rs. 1,561-8-7; but Col. Cautley has made two at Roorkee in all respects similar, for Rs. 500 each! When the day arrives in which advantage will be taken of all the facilities afforded for the production of wealth in India, the aspect of the country will be wondrously changed for the better.—Delhi Gaz., Nov. 23.

JOTEE PERSHAUD, we have heard, has offered to cry "quits" with the Government, if they forego the criminal prosecution against him. The proposal was, we are assured, deliberately forwarded to the Governor-General, it is needless to say with what result. The Mofussils declares that either Jotee Pershaud shall have his money and freedom, and reparation for the insults and injuries which have been heaped upon him, or Parliament shall have a new Indian grievance, which it will never hear the last of.—Delhi Gaz. Nov. 16.

SIR C. NAPIER.—The arrangements of the Commander-in-Chief are all perfected, and Sir C. Napier is on his route homeward. Col. Tucker remains at Simla to await the arrival of Sir William Gomm. All other heads of departments went down with the Commander-in-Chief, with a portion of the establishments, and the remainder are left at Simla as was done last season. Lieut.-col. Becher remains in charge of the portion of the quartermaster-general's office, and is charged with the survey of Simla. Major MacMurdo remains in charge of the portion of the office of the adjutant-general of the Queen's troops.—Delhi Gazette, Nov. 24.

EXAMINATION OF OFFICERS.—The committee of examination that should have met on the 15th, sat at the Artillery Mess House on Monday, the 18th, and again by adjournment on the 19th inst. President, Capt. H. Wakefield, Cant. Joint Magistrate, Capt. Percy Eld, 9th N.I., and Lieut. Russell, Beng. art. The number of candidates who presented themselves for examination was eleven:—Ens. Moseley, 65th N.I., and Lieut. Birch, 1st Beng. fus., passed the interpreters' examination; Lieut. Moir, H.A., Lieut. Pester, 63rd N.I., and Lieut. Johnstone, 5th N.I., passed in Hindoostanee. One officer who went up for the interpreters' examination, and five, who attempted Hindoostanee, were, what is technically called "spun."—Lahore Chron., Nov. 20.

THE KOHAT COUNTRY.—As a precautionary measure, and one likely to answer the object in view, a small force, consisting of the 2nd Punjab irr. inf., 100 suwars, and two guns, the whole commanded by Capt. Vaughan, has been posted at a place called Nuree, which is on the "high road" from Kohat to Bunoo. Nuree is a small scattered village, occupying the eastern extremity of some table land extending to a distance westward. The spot may be traced on the map with sufficient correctness by drawing a line southward from Kohat to Lukee, and intersecting it with another drawn from Bahadur Khel to a point fifteen miles east of that place, which is on the boundary of the British territory towards Afghanistan. We do not know whether there is any intention of forming a permanent station at Nuree, or its neighbourhood, but such a measure would form a useful link in the chain of the Punjab irregular force, which now extends from Hoond, in the Yoozoofaie country, in the north, to Dhera Gazee Khan, in the south, as follows:—2nd cavalry at Hoond, on the right bank of the Indus; 1st cavalry, at Peshawur; guide corps, at the same station; 1st infantry, at Kohat; 2nd Infantry, at Nuree; 5th cavalry, at Dhera Ismael Khan; 4th cavalry, at Dhera Ghazee Khan; 5th cavalry, at the same station; so that, with the exception of the regular troops at Peshawur and the camel corps at Dhera Ismael Khan, the whole of the frontier is entrusted to the irregular force, which a departing Commander-in-Chief was pleased to style a rabble, almost in the same breath in which he bestowed just praise on the admirable conduct of Coke's men in the Kohat pass.—Delhi Gazette, Nov. 9.

EARTHQUAKE.—We have the following from Tejpore, in Assam, announcing the occurrence of a smart earthquake in that neighbourhood on the 10th Nov.:—"At 9½ A.M. of the 10th inst., yesterday, a smart shock of an earthquake was felt at this station, preceded for some seconds by a loud rumbling noise, resembling in tone the sound of a continued peal of thunder, proceeding from and deadened by distance. The house of the writer shook twice, if not three times, successively in a manner which indicated its course to be from S. W. to N. E. (or in that direction), and its movements to have been of an undulating character—the effects lasted over one minute. The general aspect of the weather for several days before was threatening—portending rain, but yielding none. During these days the weather was not 'oppressive'; on the contrary, every one complained of its being chilly. Thermometer at the time 72 deg., the same standard as obtained at that hour on the 8th and 9th, as well as to-day, the 11th."—Hurharu, Nov. 23.

OUDE.—We republish the Englishman's remarks upon the Hurharu's article on the Beitah affair, and the recent executions at Lucknow. The writer of this article, having resided for a year in Oude, and there enjoyed an intimacy with many of the most experienced European officers in the service of the king of Oude, men who have spent their lives in "the district," is competent to give some evidence upon the matter in dispute between his two elder brothers, and it is 'entirely in favour of the Hurharu. It is neither an exaggeration nor "absurd" to represent the majority of the forts, so numerous in the Oude territories, as, "the holds of gangs of robbers and murderers. Hundreds of such holds do exist. Mud forts, formidable principally from the difficulty of the approach to them. Capable of resisting the attacks of small bodies of men, but usually vacated after a few hours firing when invested by one of the king's regiments; the occupants when pressed escaping into the wild and almost impenetrable jungle with which the country abounds. It is not correct to describe these forts as fully answering the purpose of resisting the monstrous oppression of the government, "when the British forces are not called in to aid the wretched despotism." We imagine that the affair in which Lieut. Elderton lost his life was the almost solitary instance in which the aid of our sepahees has been called in against the refractory zemindars for several years. The English forces in Oude lie in listless ease at Lucknow. A sort of dekh ne he waste force, valuable to the king merely as bearing testimony to the amicable relations which exist between his government and his powerful neighbour Compane Jehan Bahadoor. The king's regiments are quite sufficient for all purposes of collecting the revenue, and some of them are very fine troops. We have seen one of these regiments 1,000 strong, composed of more stalwart men, as well disciplined, and nearly as well appointed as any native (infantry in the Company's service, with an efficient park of six field guns, and capable by itself of reducing almost any fort in Oude."—Citizen, Nov. 21.

THE BIDDLE CASE.—The case which the Englishman calls the "Great Biddle Case," was determined yesterday in the Supreme Court; but we doubt much whether it will be found to have decided anything of much importance or interest to the public. The action was originally brought, or said to be brought, to raise the question whether the Indian Legislature possesses the power of imposing any tax whatever, municipal or otherwise, on parties subject to English law. The Court some time since decided that it had. What Great Question remained to be determined after this, we do not very clearly perceive. The present proceeding was stated to have for its object the decision of the question whether the rules passed by the municipal commissioners were valid. Even this question would not have been one of very vital consequence to the public; but the proceedings seem to have been so framed as not to raise it after all! The "great constitutional questions" in short seem to have dwindled ultimately into something very small; and the main question, as far as we can see, was whether Mr. Biddle's conveyance (the victim of the commissioner's bailiff) was a buggy or an office jaun!—One thing seems clear. The Act is defective, and had better be amended at once.—Hurharu, Nov. 14.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

MOVEMENTS OF TROOPS.

Head Quarters, Simla, 26th Oct., 1850.—The following changes of quarters are, with the sanction of the most noble the Governor-General of India, to be carried into effect in the order specified:—

60th N.I. from Cawnpore to Bandah, as soon as necessary arrangements for march can be made.

48th N.I. from Bandah to Cawnpore, on being relieved by 60th N.I.

INDIAN ALLOWANCES TO QUEEN'S OFFICERS.

Fort William, 22nd Nov., 1850.—In continuation of the G. G. O. of Sept. 6 last, and with reference to a letter from the Honourable the Court of Directors to the Government of Fort St. George, of June 17, 1846, the hon. the president of the Council of India, in council, is pleased to declare, that "The privilege therein granted to officers of her Majesty's service on the Madras establishment, of drawing their Indian allowances from the date of arrival at Bombay, is assignable to those whose regiments or departments are located north of the Kistna river elsewhere than in the northern sircars, or at posts nearer to Bombay than to Fort St. George, or at stations on the western coast, and its vicinity, viz., Travancore, Malabar, and Canara, Coorg, Palghaterry, French-rocks, and Hurryhur."

2. In like manner officers serving on the western coast of the Madras presidency and its vicinity, as above stated, are, on obtaining permission to return to Europe, allowed the option of embarking at Bombay; and officers serving in the northern division of the Madras army, are allowed, from March 1 to Oct. 1 annually, the option of embarking at Calcutta, with the privilege in each case of receiving pay and Indian allowances up to the date of embarkation.

COURTS-MARTIAL.

ENSGN EDWARD HUNTER, 24TH N.I.

Head-Quarters, Oct. 31, 1850.—At a general court-martial assembled at Benares, on Monday, Sept. 23, 1850, Ens. E. Hunter, 24th N.I. was arraigned on the following charge:—

For conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, in the following instances:—

1st. In having failed to fulfil his engagement to liquidate, by monthly instalments, a loan from the North-Western Bank received by him at Lucknow in the month of May 1847, made to him on that condition, and for which the late Dr. Glennie was security, in consequence of which failure, the estate of the late Dr. Glennie was charged by the bank at Meerut, in the month of March 1850, with about Rs. 400, on his, Ens. Hunter's, account.

2nd. In having, at Goruckpore, on or about April 9, 1850, on false pretences, obtained leave to visit Benares from the 18th to the 30th of that month, ostensibly for the purpose of settling his debt to the estate of the late Dr. Glennie; and in having, in a letter to the adjutant of the reg., dated Goruckpore, April 14, 1850, falsely declared that his visit to Benares had reference to that object, whereas he thereupon made no arrangements for a settlement with the estate of the late Dr. Glennie, and on his arrival at Benares, on or about April 20, 1850, he informed the assist. adj. gen. of the div. that his sole motive for obtaining leave of absence was to endeavour to obtain an audience of the maj. gen. commanding the division, in order to make representations derogatory to his commanding officer, to the adj. of the reg., and to another officer of that corps.

3rd. In having taken occasion of his visit to Benares, mentioned in the 2nd instance, in an interview with the assist.-adjut.-gen., on or about April 20th, 1850, disrespectfully and groundlessly to represent his commg. officer as incompetent to discharge his duties, and falsely to accuse the adjut. of the reg. of writing letters to him, Ens. Hunter, purporting to have been written by order of the commg. officer, but really written without such authority.

Finding.—On the first instance of the charge.—Guilty.

On the 2nd instance of the charge, guilty "of having in a letter to the adjut. of the reg., dated Goruckpore, April 14th, 1850, falsely declared that his visit to Benares had reference to settling his debt to the estate of the late Dr. Glennie, whereas, on his arrival at Benares, on or about April 20th, he informed the assist.-adjut.-genl. of the div. that his sole motive for obtaining leave of absence was to endeavour to obtain an audience of the maj.-genl. commg. the div. in order to make representations derogatory to his commg. officer, to the adjut. of the reg., and to another officer of that corps," and acquitted of the rest of this instance of the charge.

On the third instance of the charge, and on the preamble of the charge, Guilty.

Sentence.—To be cashiered.

Approved and confirmed.

(Signed) C. J. NAPIER, Gen. C.-in-C.

The name of Ens. (now lieut.) E. Hunter is to be struck off the rolls of the 24th N.I., from the date of publication of this order at Goruckpore, of which a report is to be made to the adjut.-gen. of the army, and to the assist.-adjut.-gen at the presidency.

MAJOR JOHN BARTLEMAN, 44TH N.I.

Head Quarters, Simla, Nov. 14, 1850.—At a general court-martial, assembled in Fort William, on Saturday, Oct. 19, 1850, Maj. J. Bartleman, 44th N.I. was arraigned on the following charges:—

1st. For scandalous, infamous conduct, unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having at Barrackpore, under cloak of the almost paternal authority, with which he had been entrusted by the father of Mrs. Shelton, the wife of Lieut. Shelton, 38th N.I., in pursuance of a base endeavour to seduce the affections of that lady, written to her, on or about Aug. 22, 1850, a highly unbecoming note, and afterwards authorized a person named W. P. Downing, an attorney, to communicate clandestinely with Mrs. Shelton, on his behalf.

2nd. For most disgraceful conduct, in having at Barrackpore, on the evening of Aug. 25, 1850, persisted in entering the house of Lieut. Shelton, with the express purpose of speaking to that officer's wife, in his presence, in disregard of Lieut. Shelton's positive and repeated prohibition; in having persisted in remaining there, in spite of Lieut. Shelton's remonstrances and opposition; in having, while there, basely availed himself of his superior strength, to inflict personal chastisement on Lieut. Shelton; and in having, shortly after leaving his house, returned again in company with Lieut. Shelton's commanding officer, and in having taken that opportunity to communicate with Mrs. Shelton.

3rd. For disgraceful conduct in having, at Barrackpore, a day or two after these occurrences, clandestinely received from Mrs. Shelton a note on the subject of them, which note he brought forward at a Court of Inquiry, on Aug. 27th, 1850, as a justification for his intruding himself into Lieut. Shelton's house, as alleged in the 2nd charge.

Finding.—On the 1st charge, guilty of conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman; in having, at Barrackpore, in pursuance of an endeavour to seduce the affections of Mrs. Shelton, wife of Lieut. Shelton, 38th N.I., written to her, on or about Aug. 22nd, 1850, a highly unbecoming note; but acquit him of the rest of this charge.

On the 2nd charge guilty, with exception of the words "basely availing himself of his superior strength," of which they acquit him.

On the 3rd charge guilty, with exception of the words "disgraceful conduct," of which they acquit him.

Sentence.—To be cashiered.

Confirmed.

(Signed)

C. J. NAPIER, Gen. C.-in-C.

Recommendation by the Court.—The Court, having performed its duty, beg to bring to the notice of the C.-in-C. that, by the Articles of War, they have been compelled to pass the extreme sentence of cashiering upon the prisoner; but considering the highly peculiar nature of this investigation, the dangerously trying position in which the prisoner found himself placed by circumstances resulting from one fault, which, however reprehensible, has still not always been considered as necessarily subversive of military discipline, the Court is induced to recommend the long service of the prisoner to any favourable consideration which the clemency of the C.-in-C. may be disposed to extend.

Remarks by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.—The Court recommends the prisoner to the favourable consideration of the C.-in-C., which, in plain terms, is this—to restore Mr. Bartleman to the command of the 44th regt.; after the Court has branded him as "guilty of conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman" in one instance; and in another as "guilty of disgraceful conduct." I cannot understand the conduct of the Court, in thus endeavouring to throw upon the C.-in-C. the odium of refusing that which its own sentence renders it impossible for him to grant, without insulting the officers of the Bengal Army in general, and those of the 44th in particular! I must leave the members of the Court to their own reflection on such a proceeding, feeling confident that many must have been adverse to this recommendation.

The name of Major J. Bartleman will be struck off the rolls of the 44th N.I. from the date of publication of this order at Barrackpore, of which a report is to be made to the Adjut.-Gen. of the Army at Simla, and to the Assist.-Adjut.-Gen. at the Presidency.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A COURT-MARTIAL is to assemble on the 25th inst. at Wal-tair, for the trial of an officer of the 30th N.I., on charges arising out of some transactions with the Agra bank.—Athen. Nov. 23.

THE 9TH REGT. N.I. had arrived at Gungakare, on the banks of Godavery, 170 miles from Hyderabad, on the 10th Nov., all well, and expected to reach Secunderabad on the 30th.

ON-DUTY.—We understand that, consequent upon the return to Europe of Brigadier Montgomerie, c. a., Lt. col. Conran will be appointed commandant of artillery, and that Lieut. col. Whynnyates will vacate his present appointment of principal commissary of ordnance, and assume the command of the horse brigade; Lieut. col. Blundell, c. a., succeeding to the principal commissaryship; also that Lieut. col. Shirreff, shortly expected from England, will, as the next senior officer, in all likelihood, be nominated to the command of the 1st battalion and artillery with the Hyderabad subsidiary force, about to be vacated by the above arrangements.—Spectator.

THE DAYS OF CASTE NUMBERED.—It is not our purpose to enter into a discussion with reference to the antiquity of this accursed system: it would be an unprofitable as well as an unpleasant labour to grope through the dreary and dark void of the past, to the first of the "innumerable series of years" during which it has shed over our country the combined influence of all the most malignant stars with which the gloomy imagination of the Chaldean astrologer ever peopled the glorious heaven above us; nor are we disposed to test its merits as a religious ordinance—for, it would be an insult to the majesty of reason to permit such a contemptible impostor to stand before its tribunal and claim the hallowed name of truth—it has the indelible brand of falsehood on its forehead. But let us contemplate for a time its tendencies in a social and moral point of view: let us see how it alienates man from man; how it quenches the God-lit ray of the intellect; how it chains down the aspiring mind to grovel on the earth, and traces, as it were, a wizard-ring around it to check the development of its varied capacities; how it reconciles the heart to every feeling of degradation, and teaches it to fly to an unmanly sense of resignation to seek consolation for the bitterness of the lot it assigns to many:—and then let us ask ourselves, calmly and dispassionately, if such a system can be conducive to the good of the human race, and if it be an unjust and an unrighteous hatred which would inscribe on its brow, in characters of quenchless fire, Delenda est Carthago?—Madras Hindoo Chronicle (a native paper), Oct. 17.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.—The Madras Spectator states, as an admitted certainty, that Sir George Berkeley has tendered his resignation of this command, considering it derogatory on his part, as a senior officer, to serve under Sir William Gomm.

MR. J. C. WROUGHTON, of the civil service, is, we learn, about proceeding to Europe on furlough. This circumstance it is thought will, in all probability, advance Messrs. Thomas and John Bird, at present acting collectors of Coimbatore and South Arcot; Mr. C. J. Bird succeeding to the permanent charge of the collectorate of Tinnevely, where he is now acting.—Athenaeum, Nov. 23.

ASSAULT BY A PRIVATE ON HIS OFFICER.—At a court-martial held at Fort St. George on Oct. 31, 1850, Private George Burton, of H.M.'s 51st regt. light infantry, was found guilty of having violently struck his superior officer, Lieut. Pegus, on the neck and on the mouth, with his clenched hand, and, on being accused by Lieut. Pegus of having struck him, again struck the lieutenant a violent blow on the mouth with his clenched fist, and attempted to kick him. Sir G. Berkeley, the commander-in-chief, in confirming the sentence of the Court, that the prisoner be transported for life, observed: "This attack of the prisoner on his superior officer, whom, it appears, he struck three times, was so wanton and unprovoked, that it was fully deserving of the highest penalty that could be awarded—that of death; and had the Court adjudged such punishment, I should certainly have felt myself justified in ordering it to be carried into effect."

DR. WYLIE.—Last evening a public entertainment was given at the Club Rooms to Dr. John Wylie, c. a., surgeon-general of the presidency, by a number of his friends, to congratulate him on his having received the honour of the Companionship of the Bath. The Right Hon. the Governor was present, and about sixty gentlemen sat down to the entertainment given to the only surviving hero of Corygaum, and spent a very happy evening.—Athenaeum, Nov. 12.

BOMBAY.

MUSULMAN FANATICISM.

On the evening of November 15th, the little village of Mahim was the scene of a murder, perhaps the most determined which has ever stained the annals of Bombay. Three men were massacred in cold blood, in a house used by the Kojah caste, in open daylight, and in the middle of a densely-populated part of the town. Thirteen prisoners are in custody.

It appears that on that Friday evening, while the European inspector of the place and almost every sepooy in the division were employed upon the sea-beach, preserving the peace among the mob there collected, on the occasion of the throwing into the water of the taboots, an alarm was received of a fight in the Khojah Jemmat Khana, in the bazaar. A body of men were sent to the spot instantly by the constable, Mr. Wevers, who followed himself. On his arrival he found three men lying dead upon the floor of the upper room of the Jemmat Khana, with a fourth nearly lifeless. The floor, which was matted, was literally streaming with their blood. The whole of the parties connected with this affair are Khojahs. Their caste is now divided into two classes, between whom a quarrel has been for two or three years in existence, regarding the head of the caste,—one party setting up Aga Khan as their leader, and the other party acknowledging the authority of a man named Noor Mahomed. These two classes of the caste, previously to the dissensions alluded to, held their assemblies and festivals in the same house, in the bazaar; but since their disunion, the lower apartments have been occupied by the followers of Aga Khan, and the upper part has been set apart for the other party. The two divisions still have joint right in the caste burial-place at Tar-waddee, where, on the afternoon of the murder, all the parties had been to perform some religious ceremonies, usual on the last day of the Mohurrum. It is customary with the people of the Khojah caste to meet in their assembly-rooms after the taboots have been thrown into the water, on the tenth day of the Mohurrum, and to partake of a feast usually provided there. A feast was as usual prepared by the members of Noor Mahomed's party, and the viands were ready in a cook-house adjoining, when some men of their division of the caste proceeded to the house, and went up-stairs to their room at once, there to wait the coming of the rest of their party, who were at the time engaged with their taboots upon the sea-beach. They had not been there many minutes, before they were surprised by hearing a few strokes beaten upon a tom-tom, as a signal, and a gang of twenty or thirty men rushed up-stairs with naked swords in their hands, vociferating, "Deen, Deen, Aga Khan-ha-deen," and immediately commenced a murderous attack upon the little party in the room. One of the men who were the victims of this deadly attack, Veejee Allaneer, received some cuts so severe, that, though not yet dead, his recovery is almost hopeless. This man's version of the murder, of which he was an eye-witness, has been taken on oath by Mr. Spens. All the other people in the room were massacred.

The expression "Aga Khan-ha-deen" simply means, "Aga Khan's religion" or sect; it was used as a rallying cry. The word "Kojah" will remind many of the Arabian Nights, where, under the disguise of Cogia, the same term is applied to many of the actors in those tales, the simple meaning of the word being "gentleman" or "merchant."

"The Kojahs," says Sir Erskine Perry, in his able judgment delivered in 1847, "are a small caste in Western India, who appear to have originally come from Sindhor Cutch, and who, by their own traditions, which are probably correct, were converted from Hinduism about 400 years ago by a Pir, named Sudr Din. Their language is Cutchi; their religion Mahomedan; their dress, appearance, and manners, for the most part Hindu. The Kojahs are now settled principally amongst Hindu communities, such as Kutch, Kattaawar, and Bombay, which latter place probably is their head-quarters. They constitute at this place apparently about two thousand souls, and their occupations for the most part are confined to the more subordinate departments of trade. Indeed, the caste never seems to have emerged from the obscurity which attends their present history; and the almost total ignorance of letters, of the principles of their religion, and of their own status which they now evince, is probably the same as has always existed among them since they first embraced the precepts of Mahomed. Although they call themselves Mussulmans, they evidently know but little of their prophet and of the Koran, and their chief reverence at the present time is reserved for Aga Khan, a Persian nobleman, well known in contemporaneous Indian history, and whom they believe to be a descendant of the Pir, who converted them to Islam. But even to the blood of their saint, they adhere by a frail tenure, for it was proved, that when the grandmother of Aga Khan made her appearance in Bombay some years ago, and claimed tithes from the faithful, they repudiated their allegiance, commenced litigation in this court, and professed to the Kazi of Bombay, their intention to incorporate themselves with the general body of Mussulmans in this island. To use the words of one of themselves, they call themselves Shias to a Shia, and Sunis to a Sunni, and probably neither know nor care anything of the distinctive doctrines of either of these great divisions of the Mussulman world. They have moreover no translation of the Koran into their vernacular language, or into Guzerathi, their language of business; which is remarkable, when we recollect the long succession of pious Mussulman kings who reigned in Guzerath, and in the countries in which the Kojahs were located. Nor have they any scholars, or men of learning among them, as not a Kojah could be quoted who was acquainted with Arabic or Persian, the two great languages of Mahometan literature and theology. And the only religious work of which we heard as being current amongst them, was one called the Dees Avata, in the Sindhi character and Cutch language, and which, as professing to give a history of the tenth incarnation in the person of their saint Sudr Din, appears to be a strange combination of Hindu articles of faith with the tenets of Islam."—Telegraph, Dec. 3.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL of Oct. 24th reached Bombay, per Sesostris, on the 24th Nov.

PURCHASING OUT IN THE INDIAN NAVY.—We are happy to learn that the arrangements for purchasing out the senior officers of the Indian Navy are proceeding more rapidly than the most sanguine of the promoters of the scheme ventured to expect. A large portion of the junior officers have requested permission to have their names enrolled as adherents, so that there seems no longer any doubt of a fund analogous to those existing in the different departments of the military service being established. The benefits promising to accrue from this, great under any circumstances, will be doubly so should the Indian Navy be abolished or materially reduced on the renewal of the Charter.—Bombay Times, Nov. 30.

INDUS STEAMERS.—The Bombay Times notices the arrival of two engines, technically called steeple engines, of eighty horsepower, intended for one of the large iron steamers about to ply on the Indus. The steamer itself has also arrived, having been packed in pieces, and will be put together immediately. Its dimensions are 210 feet from stem to stern, and 33 feet beam, its draught is only three feet, and it made, on its trial trip, a speed of from ten to eleven miles an hour.

NATIVE LIBERALITY.—The Lahore Chronicle states that Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, the well-known Parsee knight, has bestowed a pension of twenty pounds a year upon the widow of Lieut. Waghorn.

ON-DUTY.—Lieut. Col. G. J. Mant, 19th Bombay N.I., has applied to be put on the invalid list. Mr. W. W. Bell, of the civil service, contemplates a visit to his native land, and Mr. J. S. Law, of Tannah, will most probably proceed to Dharwar. It is probable that the 18th regt. Bombay N.I. will soon have two steps, by the retirement from the service of Capts. David Davidson and C. W. Maude. Col. Derinzy will carry out the intention entertained by him on proceeding to Shikarpore, of returning to Europe at the close of the cold season, about March.

MR. STRATH.—It is with much regret we announce the death, on the 16th Nov. last, of Mr. W. Strath, late superintending engineer of the Indus Flotilla, a man universally esteemed for his sterling good nature and qualifications. It is little more than a week since we gave an account of a handsome testimonial bestowed on him by the engineers of the Indus Flotilla. His time would have expired on the 25th inst., when he would have been entitled to his pension; it was this which detained him in India. —Ibid.

SIR JAMSETJEE JEEJEEBHAY has offered to erect a lying-in hospital at his own cost, and on ground he also gives for the purpose, immediately adjoining his noble institution the Jamsetjee Hospital.

THE NEPALESE GENERAL JUNG BAHADOOR left Bombay for Calcutta some days before the mail of the 3rd of December was despatched.

COMMISSIONERSHIP OF SCINDE.—We believe it is quite certain that Mr. H. B. E. Frere, at present commissioner at Satara, succeeds Mr. R. K. Pringle as commissioner in Scinde; and that Mr. Frere will be succeeded by Mr. T. Ogilvy, at present political agent in Cutch. —B. Times, Dec. 2.

SURVEYS.—Commander Selby sailed a week since in the brig Palinurus, with the view of continuing the survey of the Malabar Coast, a very small portion of which has hitherto been examined by hydrographers. Lieut. Taylor is at present engaged in a survey of the Gulf of Cutch; this is proposed to be carried round Kattiawar to Cambay, and so southward by Surat to Bombay. The Gulf of Cambay, which will be re-examined, was carefully surveyed by Capt. Ethersey fourteen years ago. —Ibid.

KHORASAN CATS.—Within the last week, several kafias from Khandahar have arrived with dried fruits, poshteens, chogas, &c. &c. Among them we observed some very beautiful Khorasan cats, far surpassing those of the famous Bussora breed. Those that were brought to us were of tortoise-shell colour, and so exquisite was the beauty of the original, compared with the artificial, that we do not remember for many a day to have seen such beautiful specimens of the feline species. —Kurrachee Advertiser, Nov. 23.

THE LORD BISHOP OF MADRAS embarked from the Apollo Pier on Monday forenoon, under a salute from the battery, which was repeated by the Hastings on his lordship reaching the Hugh Lindsay. The Right Rev. Prelate had given very general satisfaction while amongst us, and his departure is much regretted. —Bombay Times, Nov. 27.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

NATIVE LANGUAGES.

Adjutant-General's Office, Bombay, Nov. 1, 1850.—With reference to G. G. O. of July 19, general officers commanding divisions will be pleased to assemble committees at the principal stations within their respective commands, at the expiration of six months from the date of publication of the G. G. O. adverted to, for the examination in Hindoostanee of such unpassed officers on staff or detached employ as are subject to the provisions of the 2nd para. of the General Orders by the Most Noble the Governor-General of India, dated Simla, June 25, 1850, and as may appear before them.

The committees are to be composed of passed interpreters, and to consist of a president (not under the rank of captain) and two members. The examinations are to be conducted and the reports made in strict conformity to such instructions as may be received from the presidency committee, to the secretary of which the proceedings, together with the whole of the examination papers, are to be transmitted by the presidents, the question of the qualification of each candidate for the duty of interpreter being left to be decided by that committee.

FURLONGHS AVAILABLE.

Bombay Castle, Nov. 20.—Furloughs available, 8. Admitted, W. W. Bell.

COURTS MARTIAL.

CAPTAIN C. J. SYMONS, 5TH N.L.I.

Head Quarters, Bombay, Nov. 21, 1850.—At a European General Court-Martial, assembled at Ahmedabad, on Monday, Oct. 28, 1850, and of which Lieut.-Col. J. E. G. Morris, of the 12th regt. N.I., is president, Captain C. J. Symons, 5th N.L.I., was tried on the following charge, viz.:—

Charge.—For highly insubordinate conduct, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in the following instances, viz.:—

In having, on or about the night of Sept. 15, 1850, when senior officer present at the mess of the regiment, publicly canvassed in a disparaging and disrespectful manner the character and authority of his commanding officer, Major R. A. Bayly, in respect to a matter relating to the mess which had been sanctioned by him.

Second.—In having, at or about the same time and place, made use of most gross and offensive language, reflecting in an opprobrious manner on his immediate comm. officer, Major R. A. Bayly.

Finding.—Guilty.

Revised Sentence.—To be suspended from rank, pay, and allowances for six months.

Confirmed,

WILLOUGHBY COTTEW, Lieut.-Gen., C.-in-C.,
Bombay Army.

Remarks by the Commander-in-Chief.—I regret I cannot attend to the recommendation of the Court in this case, as I consider that even the revised sentence passed upon Captain Symons is inadequate to the very serious offence of which he has been found guilty.

WILLOUGHBY COTTEW, Lieut.-Gen., C.-in-C.,
Bombay Army.

The suspension awarded to Captain C. J. Symons will take effect from the date of the publication of this order at Ahmedabad, which is to be reported to the adjutant-general of the army.

CEYLON.

Downing-street, 15th Aug. 1850.

"My Lord,—It is my painful duty to inform your lordship that her Majesty has been pleased, on my advice, to direct that you should be relieved from the government of Ceylon, to which Sir George Anderson has been appointed, and I am to signify to you her Majesty's permission, if you should wish to leave the colony previously to the arrival of your successor, to hand over the temporary administration of the Government to the acting colonial secretary, in virtue of the commission as Lieutenant-Governor, which has been given to the officer holding that situation."

(After expressing the approbation of her Majesty's Government of his lordship's financial measures, and his success in maintaining the public peace since the suppression of the insurrection in 1848.)

"But while I have much satisfaction in expressing to this extent my approval of your administration, I am compelled to add that, in the course of the proceedings of a Select Committee of the House of Commons, which has during two sessions been engaged in an inquiry into the affairs of Ceylon, it has appeared, from evidence and documents submitted to the Committee, that your lordship has failed in maintaining amongst the different persons employed in the public service in the colony that harmonious co-operation with each other, and that respect towards yourself, which are indispensable to the proper administration of its affairs."

"By a resolution of the House of Commons, the minutes of the committee's proceedings have been referred to her Majesty's Government, and in so far as they affect other parties, they will receive deliberate consideration; but I am already sufficiently acquainted with their tenor, to be satisfied that as respects your lordship they lead inevitably to the above conclusion."

"Without entering further into the painful circumstances to which your lordship will perceive that I have alluded, it is sufficient for me to state that these circumstances have appeared to her Majesty's Government to render it necessary for the public interest, that the administration of the Government of Ceylon should be placed in other hands; and it has accordingly been my duty to submit to her Majesty the advice to that effect which I have already informed you that her Majesty has been pleased to adopt."

"I have, &c. (Signed) "GARR."

"To the Viscount Torrington."

CHINA.

The Straits Times Extra of the 7th Nov. informs us that "the civil war still raged in Canton and the adjoining provinces, and the rebels had approached to within sixty miles of Canton city. A battle between them and the troops sent from Canton took place, in which the troops were beaten and driven back with the loss of 500 to 600 of their number. The foreign residents do not apprehend any danger to the factories."

The other intelligence from China in the same paper is not of a later date than our last advices.

SIAM.

The Singapore Free Press of Oct. 18, gives a very detailed account of the mission of Sir James Brooke to Siam. He left Singapore with his suite on Aug. 3, with H. M. steamer Sphynx, and the H. C. steamer Nemesis, and arrived off the bar of the Menam in six days. The rumours which greeted their arrival were of the most unfriendly character. Preparations, it is said, had been made to oppose them, if the mission should be of a hostile character; 20,000 soldiers were assembled to man the batteries, booms were ready to be launched across the river, and fire junks to be sent down to burn the steamers, and an Armenian Jew was employed in disciplining the motley army of the state. The morning after their arrival, the Nemesis was despatched to bring pilots, which were freely granted; and the envoy's letter was received under a salute. Unfortunately, in attempting to ascend the river, the Sphinx took the ground, and every effort to extricate her in time proved ineffectual. On the 14th Sir James Brooke started in the Nemesis to meet the praklang, or foreign minister, at Paknam. The interview passed off satisfactorily: state-boats were despatched to the steamer to bring Lord Palmerston's letter, and it was taken on shore in one of the king's barges under salutes. The minister, however, declined entering on business before the mission reached the capital, and it soon became evident that the steamer would not be permitted to proceed up the river. On the 22nd, Sir James left the Nemesis with his suite and guard of marines in seven state barges. On the 26th, he visited the praklang, to be introduced to the chief ministers. At this interview, it was determined that all the negotiations should be in writing. A few days subsequently, it was rumoured that the king was decidedly hostile to the mission, and that the great majority of the ministers had determined on refusing every proposition. On Sept. 4, the first notes of Sir James Brooke were delivered to the praklang, and these were followed in a short time by the commercial proposals. The tone of the envoy was most conciliatory, and the propositions he is understood to have delivered were very moderate. They pointed to the necessity of permission being given for the residence of a consul, and the grant of ground for the merchants' houses and warehouses; and the propriety of abolishing the power of arbitrary deportation. The commercial requisitions were for the abolition of the present monopolies, freedom for the exportation of paddy and rice, and a reduction of the heavy measurement duty. The loss which these concessions might entail would be more than compensated by the six or eight articles which are still left as state monopolies, and the increase of shipping and commerce, which would follow these liberal arrangements. The ministers took three weeks to consider the proposals, and on the 26th of September are understood to have sent in their ultimatum, negating every one of them. The tone assumed in the reply is said to have been insolent and decidedly inimical. The mission left Bangkok on the 28th of September, and returned to Singapore without having accomplished a single object.

LEW CHEW ISLANDS.

Information has been received from Dr. Bettelheim up to 28th December, 1849, at which date he, his wife, and family, were well; but the system of watching his motions whenever he goes abroad, by spies, is kept up, and he is prevented from addressing the people. He says, in order to hinder his movements on the Sunday, they make preparations the day before, doubling the guard and look-out men, so that when he goes out, he finds them at the end of every lane, whilst men precede him, crying, "The barbarian! the barbarian! Shut your doors!" A cordon of men likewise surround him as he walks. He has sometimes, he says, hid himself in a thicket until the evening, and then suddenly shown himself in the crowded market-place of the capital; but the enemy is soon on the alert, and with long bamboos strike the naked bodies of the people, calling out, "Why don't you run? why don't you run?"

The journal of the missionary, in the Chinese Repository, is a curious document, showing the extraordinary patience and perseverance of both parties,—Dr. Bettelheim in his long-continued efforts to communicate with the people, and the government authorities in expedients to prevent him, without using actual force.

A long letter of the Regent, in reply to the representations of the missionary, contains the following passage: "You remark, 'Jesus is almighty, and his power immeasurable and boundless; who can resist his will?' For ages, we in this land have rejoiced, with the rulers and statesmen of China, in learning the doctrines of Confucius and Mencius alone. By these, rulers and ruled, according to their several stations, are able to cultivate virtue and regulate their households; and in the government of the country, we follow the rules left behind by those sages and holy men, which have been to us an everlasting canon of peace and prosperity. But the hearts of men do not at all incline to hear the doctrines of Jesus. You have in days past orally explained, and nobody has received them; though you still loiter and hang about here for a long time, wishing people to hear them, yet nobody will believe and accept them. Hereafter I wish you would cease this preaching, and, when a ship arrives, go aboard of her, and return home."

SYRIA.

A letter from Constantinople gives the following further particulars respecting the insurrection at Aleppo:—"On the evening of the 7th November, Kerim Pasha invited the principal chiefs of the insurgents to come to him. They accepted this invitation, and Kerim Pasha had them placed under arrest. The insurgents, finding their chiefs did not return, rushed to arms, and, in number about 10,000, insolently demanded their liberation. The Ottoman general charged them at the head of 4,000 imperial troops. The combat was desperate, and lasted more than twenty-four hours, but the result was favourable to the Turks. Three Mussulman quarters,—Karlek, Bab Coussa, and El Bab Neirab,—which were the seat of the revolt,—have been almost entirely destroyed; 1,800 rebels fell in the struggle, and the remainder, with the inhabitants of the above quarters, have fled from Aleppo, the Turkish cavalry pursuing them. Not a single Christian fell in this terrible affair. All the property of the rebels will be devoted by the authorities to indemnify the Christians for their losses on the 14th and 15th of October, and to rebuild the three churches which were burnt."

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

A visit of the Bishop of Cape Town to the Kaffir chief Umhala, at his kraal, on the Gnoubie, near Fort Waterloo, took place on the evening of the 1st of August. His lordship, after a perilous journey overland from Natal, of twenty-two days (during which his cart and horses were twice overturned, and the former broken to pieces), arrived safe at King William's Town, where he officiated twice on the ensuing Sunday in the temporary church there, holding a confirmation during the second service. The Bishop started in a mule waggon, accompanied by the Rev. F. Fleming and a mounted escort, for Fort Waterloo, arriving there by sun-down. After some refreshment, his lordship started on foot, in the dark, about eight o'clock in the evening, accompanied by the Rev. F. Fleming (bearing a blanket, some beads, and knives) and Mr. Shepstone, the interpreter, for the old chief's kraal, distant about half a mile.

Umhala received the Bishop and his party in his hut, surrounded by his counsellors, sons, and wives, in all amounting to about forty or fifty souls. The hut was a large and spacious Kaffir one, built on a circle of poles, about 7 or 8 feet high, and in the centre was placed a fire of wood, affording the only light, and which, with the fumes of tobacco, filled the atmosphere with smoke, very disagreeable and trying to the sight for a time. The Bishop sat near the door of the hut on the ground, on a skin, with Mr. Shepstone and Mr. Fleming on either hand. Umhala was opposite, in the middle. The Bishop opened the interview by asking Umhala (through Mr. Shepstone) if he knew him. He replied, "Yes, I know you; you are the inkosi enkulu (great chief) of the Christians, and I saw you with Smith at the great meeting at King William's Town." The Bishop then informed him that he was come to converse with him about sending him a missionary or teacher to instruct him and his people in the ways of God. Umhala expressed at some length, and with warmth, his obligations for the visit, and thanked the Bishop for his offer of a teacher, saying, he would treat him very kindly when he came, and listen to him. The Bishop then informed him, that he brought him a present of a blanket, at which he seemed much pleased, receiving it from Mr. Fleming; and then rose, and shaking hands with the Bishop, thanked him very warmly. The Bishop then, in a few words, explained what their missionaries, when they arrived, would teach them. They all listened, some most attentively. He then proceeded to distribute, through Mr. Fleming, his presents to the chief's children and counsellors, &c., of beads and knives, and he himself partook of some curded milk produced for his refreshment. The Bishop took much interest in and notice of the little children, as one by one they were presented to receive their string of beads; Umhala enumerating his family all the while, as making a total of eight wives and twenty-six children. After a lengthened interview, reaching to nearly eleven o'clock at night, the Bishop took his leave and returned to the encampment. The next morning, while at breakfast, the chief appeared, attended by his eight wives, and reminded the Bishop, that he had forgotten to give presents to them the night before. His lordship then promised each of them a handkerchief, which seemed to please them much; and after giving them some breakfast, the encampment was struck; and taking leave of the old chief (who, at parting, presented the Bishop with his assagai, as a token that there was peace between them), the party left Fort Waterloo.—African Journal.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

M. Von Hammer-Purgstall, in a communication to the Journal Asiatique of Paris, refers to a statement made in a German journal, on the alleged authority of the Abbé de Marigny, that a species of Socialism existed in the reign of the Caliph Hadi; citing likewise M. de Lamartine, who speaks of a Socialist movement, a short time after Mahomet, in the mountains of Tauris. "Not recollecting," he observes, "any passage tending to support these assertions, I examined various histories in European languages and Oriental MSS., but without finding anything that could attest the existence of Socialism in the time of the Caliph Hadi, and still less a short time after Mahomet. The doctrine of Socialism was developed in its whole extent only once in the East, not in the time of Islam, but a century before Mahomet, in the reign of the Persian king Kobad, by the great Socialist Mazdek, the successor of Manes, whose doctrine is thus expounded by Tabari:—

"Towards the close of the reign of Kobad, there came from the city of Nisa, in Khorasan, Mazdek the Zendik (Freethinker), who pretended to be a prophet. He set up, in imitation of the religion of the Magi, the adoration of fire, and the marriage of mothers with their sons, fathers with their daughters, and brothers with their sisters. He taught that there never had been any such thing as private property in the world, and that God was the sole proprietor, who had created the world for the sons of Adam; that everything was in common, and all had the same rights, no one being entitled to say, 'This is my property, this is my wife, or son, or daughter;' that nobody had any title whatever to possess money, or cattle, of their own; and that it was not allowable for one to have more goods and chattels than another. This new doctrine was eagerly embraced by all the vagabonds, ruffians, and spendthrifts, who joined Mazdek in great numbers, so that in a very short time he acquired great renown, and had a crowd of partisans. At length, Kobad caused Mazdek to be summoned before him to give an explanation of his doctrine. Mazdek, who was a man of plausible and insinuating speech, in the end, so wrought upon the king, that he brought him to adopt his notions. This conversion gave such strength and encouragement to Mazdek, that whereas he had hitherto not dared to preach his doctrine publicly, he now openly propagated it, since Kobad had declared in its favour. The idle and the destitute took advantage of its provisions, and immediately set about relieving passengers of their money and goods; they next took whom they pleased of the wives and daughters of the community, no one daring to say 'She is my wife, or my daughter, my sister or my mother.' Wives cohabited with their sons; every one lived as he pleased; it was the reign of the impious and the wicked. The dupes of Mazdek beset Kobad and prevented the access of those who were not of their party, and who might have informed the king of the true state of affairs."

"Here is socialism," continues M. Hammer-Purgstall, "in all its hideous proportions, and with all its fatal consequences. In the time of Islamism, the doctrine of the Assassins and of their predecessors, the Khoorremyeh, taught, as a fundamental principle, 'to believe nothing and to do anything;' but this was the doctrine of the initiated; even the partisans of Babek, who raised the standard of revolt under the Caliph Mamun, went no farther than the doctrine of the Magi, which declared marriages between the nearest relatives legitimate: the abolition of property, or the community of goods, was not thought of."

The ancient history of Kashmir, which goes back to so early a period as fifteen centuries before Christ, revealed to us by the Raja-tarangini, or 'River of Kings,' throws much light upon the religion, the arts and sciences, and the manners of the Hindu nation which, at a date so remote, inhabited that beautiful valley. In a notice of M. Troyer's recent translation of Kalhana's curious work, contained in the Calcutta Review, is given the following sketch of the ancient Kashmirians:—

"The ancient Kashmirians were well acquainted with certain branches of practical science, as the forming of embankments, mining, coining, sculpture, and architecture. The drama, which exercised so important an influence in the development of the Hindu mind, was brought to a high state of cultivation. Learned men were highly respected. In the reign of Jayapira, 'the name of a Pandit was held in greater repute than that of a king.' Another king, Matrigupta, deposited a new drama, presented to him, in a vase of gold, to indicate his sense of its value. The educated classes won their way to the highest offices of the state; and we have an account of one man who was chosen king in consequence of his profound learning."

"The recognition of the system of caste, and the penalties annexed to the loss of it, in the Raja-tarangini, does not favour the views so ably maintained by Col. Sykes, in his 'Notes on the Anteh-Mahomedan State of India,' in which he advocates the opinion that caste did not exist as a religious distinction in ancient India. Even in Hinduism we have traces of primitive practices, in the general mixture of all classes, allowed at the festival of the Huli, and in the temple of Jagannath."

"The rite of Sati, 'a lotus-bed resplendent with flames,' was practised at an early period; and we find, also, that the Brahminical custom, formerly so rife at Benares, of sitting Dhurnâ, was also in fashion. Sanyasis were held in high favour, and in the time of one of the kings, named Arya, it is stated, 'The articles of fashionable dress were ashes of burnt cow-dung, rosaries, and matted locks of hair.'

"The Raja-tarangini confirms the testimony borne by the Hindu dramas, as well as by the ancient Hindu writings, to the fact that, in former days, women enjoyed a considerable extent of liberty, went abroad, and exercised great influence even in a political way: thus Damodara, one of the early kings of Kashmir, fought on account of a Syumbara, or lady allowed to choose her husband. This was a very ancient custom. The suitors were drawn up in a line, and the lady threw a garland of flowers round the neck of the object of her choice."

"The Ophite, or snake-worship system, practised by the Nagas, who were highlanders, existed at an early period in Kashmir. It may have been the first form of religion that prevailed there, as our author states that the first line of Kashmir kings were unworthy of record, on account of their disregarding the religion of the Vedas, which, perhaps, refers to their being adherents to the Naga worship. In the days of Abul Fazl, the prime minister of Akbar, there were 700 places for snake-worship in the valley. But this superstition was not confined to the valley. The Puranas and Hari-ransa give many details respecting the prevalence of Ophiolatry in India. The same motive that led the Hindus to adore objects of influence, whether for utility or destruction, would also induce them to revere the snake,—the emblem of eternity, and 'symbol of life,'—whose poisonous power is so fatally felt in India. Traces of this primitive form of adolatriy in India are still to be seen in remote districts of India, while the snake is a very common figure in Hindu temples. The image of Krishna trampling on the snake was probably designed to symbolize the overthrow of the aboriginal religion, which was destroyed by the same Brahminical power as Parasuram used in defeating the Kshetryas."

"Previous to the coming of the Brahminical race into Bengal, the people who now occupy the hills of Rajmahal, Birbhum, &c. &c., probably lived in the plains, and were subsequently driven by the tide of foreign conquest to their highland fastnesses. In Kashmir, in a similar way, the aboriginal races were the Nagas, Gandharas, and Dherudas, who were all Ophites, or serpent-worshippers. But in the course of time, foreign invaders, from the table-lands of Ariana, introduced the Buddhist and Brahminical systems, by their possession of superior physical power and intellectual energy. The lunar race of kings were Buddhists, and the Brahmins had the Kshetryas, or military class, as their allies. They supplanted the religion of the Nagas, or mountaineers, just as wherever the Moslem banner waved, or the Koran was chaunted, the crude superstitions which overlaid Christianity in the middle ages gave way to the traditions of the Mecca legislator. Though the Nagas seem to have been a very powerful race, and at one time to have exercised great political sway, yet they could not withstand the sapping effect of Buddhist influence, which resorted both to the arsenals of argument and of physical force, in order to propagate the dogmas of Sakhya Muni. The Ophite, or snake-worship system, seems at last to have to a great degree been amalgamated with Hinduism; in fact, it spread very widely, as the general use of the symbol of the dragon in the Chinese rites shows. The proselyting zeal of the Buddhists was founded on the principle, 'that they do not desire wisdom for themselves alone, but for the preservation of the world.'

"Subsequently, in Kashmir, a fierce struggle took place between the Sivites and the Buddhists. These two religions then existed contemporaneously, as they do in the island of Bali in the present day; and in some cases the one melted into the other. But, though many dogmas were held by the Sivites and Buddhists in common, and notwithstanding the ingenious arguments drawn from the monuments in Bali and Java by Dr. Tytler, in order to show that the two systems had a common origin, we cannot conceive how the bloody rites of Siva could have any affinity to the peaceful tenets of Buddha. Yet Buddhism itself was, in practice, occasionally warlike; for when it had fixed its roots at an early period in Kashmir, the first thirty-five kings, being Buddhists, were very active in propagating their creed, and had no scruples in appealing to the sword to carry out their religious plans. One of them, Meghavanana, at the head of a conquering army, preached on the duty of extending mercy to everything that has life! He pensioned, from the revenues of the state, all the hunters and butchers in his dominions, as his regulations deprived them of the means of gaining a livelihood."

"At the period (A.D. 399) when Fa Hian, a Chinese Buddhist priest, visited Tamuk, Buddhism was in the ascendant, not only in Kashmir, but also in Tartary, Khotan, Scinde, and Agra. Asoka left monuments of his Buddhistical zeal in the valley of Kashmir, and on the borders of the Rupanarayan at Tamuk, in those magnificent towers which long stood to attest the liberal hand with which he supported his religious views. But in the 10th century, Khamagupta, king of Kashmir, the Aurungzebe of his day, destroyed the Buddhist images, and burnt the monasteries.

"When Kalhana wrote, the worship of Siva was predominant. This system prevailed in the south of India at the commencement of the Christian era, and was in the ascendant everywhere, except in Telingana, where the people were Vishnuvites. Sivism seems to have had various points of accordance with Buddhism; and, when the Sivites embraced Buddhism, they were allowed to retain their titles and family distinctions. But when Abul Fazl visited Kashmir in 1582, the Vishnuvites had gained the ascendancy. There are now, according to Hamilton, in Kashmir, sixty-four places dedicated to Vishnu, and forty-five to Siva. In fact, the whole of Kashmir is considered by the Hindus to be holy ground, and the struggle between the Sivites and Vishnuvites now occupies the same place in history as that formerly between Brahmaas and Buddhists.

"The Buddhist as well as the Braminical religion seems to have been propagated in Kashmir through the patronage of the State, and, above all, by what has been adopted in modern times so successfully by the Moravians,—religious colonies. Connected with these were Mats, or edifices, which, combining the joint uses of a church and seminary, gave weight and local power to the priesthood. It was, in fact, the principle of resident pastors and a parochial system which gave these religions a fixity in the country, just as Musalman colonization raised up an indigenous Muhammadan agency in India. The monastic system of Europe in the middle ages, by which agricultural and social improvement was diffused, as from an oasis, through the wilds of a lone district, was adopted to a great degree in Kashmir, and, in fact, in all countries where Buddhist principles had any ascendancy."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

THURSDAY, January 2, 1851.

THE future historian of British India will find a paucity of materials for his narrative in the political and military events of the past year. The neighbouring states were and continue to be at peace with it; beyond an expedition upon a small scale into the Kohat country, against the Afreedee tribes, its armies were not employed in any hostile movement; a transient insubordination in a sepoy regiment has been the only symptom of internal dissatisfaction; every successive mail has reported "general tranquillity throughout India,"—and this, too, so soon after its territories had been enlarged by the addition of a conquered kingdom, the seat of strife and disorder.

He must be a sturdy pessimist who would refuse to recognize in this state of things evidence that the people of our Eastern empire are contented, and their content can spring from no other source than a conviction that they enjoy those material advantages which it is the office of a just government to secure to them, and which they never knew under any other rule. The people of India have not yet reached that stage of social and political refinement, when the imagination wanders from the practical to the speculative, and is incessantly upon the stretch to discover something that is deficient, or something that is wrong. If their religious and civil institutions are guaranteed to them; if they feel that they are under the protection of equal laws justly administered; if the higher classes know that their property is safe, and the lower that their humble wants are satisfied,—in their present social condition, their desires reach no farther; the far niente in their estimation has more charms than the turmoil and excitement of political agitation.

We speak of the Hindus in their "present condition," thereby meaning to imply that this condition is not unchangeable; but such a radical change in their social state as will produce an entire reorganization of the elements of their character can be wrought by one great agency alone, that of Christianity, the operation of which in India must be contemplated, we fear, through a vista of many years. Meanwhile, the civil institutions of this people are so indissolubly bound up with their religion,—which in all nations is the soul of education,—and that religion is so hostile to social advancement, that they must long remain, in a certain sense, stationary.

Whatever be its real causes, or its real indications, the prolonged tranquillity of India is productive not of barren satisfaction merely, but of positive and substantial good, present and prospective. In a fiscal point of view, whilst it has a direct tendency to augment the gross revenue of the state, it affords an opportunity of revising and reducing the state expenditure, thereby doubly benefiting the Indian finances. It is calculated, that, by the cessation of war charges and the improvement of the ordinary sources of revenue consequent upon political quiet, the large deficiency of 1848-49 will have been converted in the past year to a surplus of £400,000, and that in two or three years of continued tranquillity, the Punjab, after defraying its own expenses, civil and military, will yield at least another £400,000; so that there will be an annual surplus revenue of nearly a million sterling in our Indian Exchequer. This is an agreeable contrast to the condition of our neighbours in regard to their colony of Algeria, the net annual cost of which to the mother country, it was triumphantly announced in the National Legislative Assembly of France, the other day, is not one hundred millions of francs, but only sixty-five millions, or nearly three millions sterling; and this after twenty years' occupation!

The continuance of political tranquillity will, in the next place, enable the Indian Government to devote more attention to works of national utility, which a surplus revenue will afford the necessary means of undertaking and completing. Some of these works, so much needed by agriculture,—such as canals for irrigation,—will repay their own cost: canals will yield in addition an income of 30 and even 40 per cent. upon the outlay. Roads, too, might be made to defray the charges of construction by moderate tolls. But independent of direct returns, all works of this nature tend to enrich the country by the impulse they give to industry and the creation of wealth, and thus to augment indirectly the public revenue.

The realization of these objects cannot but have the effect of deepening and consolidating the foundations of British power in India. If, hand in hand with them, intellectual and moral instruction shall exalt each successive generation above the preceding, the people of India will be large debtors to England. The notion, that a conquered nation can be attached to its rulers by the tie of gratitude alone, may be a romantic one; but the benefits which the Hindus will have derived from their connection with us may be so evidently the fruit of that connection, that motives of interest, independent of any sense of obligation, may dispose them to cherish and preserve it.

These encouraging anticipations, which are liable to a multitude of contingencies, mainly depend, moreover, not only upon the condition we have assumed, of the continuance of political tranquillity throughout India,—the absence of all temptation as well as compulsion to make further conquests and appropriations,—but upon another, namely, that nothing shall happen violently to disturb the existing machinery of its government. Far be it from us to affirm that the system under which British India is now administered is the best of all possible schemes of rule,—sound in theory, perfect in practice, and incapable of improvement; but we do venture to say that it is one, the fundamental principles of which, whatever the anomalies, have stood the test of time and severe trials; that it is adapted to the peculiar incidents of a dependent territory circumstanced like India, and to the habits of the different nations subject to it, who would probably regard the extinction of that metaphysical personage, “the Koompanee Bahadoor,” with indefinable sensations of jealousy, apprehension, surprise, regret, and possibly resentment.

But we are entering prematurely upon a topic which is entitled to be discussed upon its own merits, and not as an appendage to another.

Our present impression contains the last of a series of papers upon “Indian Cotton,” in which the whole question (much obscured by design as well as ignorance) is clearly and temperately investigated. We recommend the careful perusal of these papers, and especially the last, to all who desire clear and correct opinions upon the subject, which is one of much moment to England as well as India.

CERTAIN officers of the Indian native army appear determined, prior to the departure of Sir C. Napier, to annoy him by making a very ostentatious display of their moral delinquencies. By way of diversifying the instances of gambling, drunkenness, and duelling, which have occurred of late in such quick succession amongst them, the present mail furnishes us with a case of another kind, every whit as bad of its class as any of the others, in which not a giddy subaltern, but a field officer of the Bengal army, makes a conspicuous figure. Major Bartleman, a man of mature age,—he has been twenty-seven years in his regiment,—and who has been twice married, being intrusted by the father of Mrs. Shelton, the wife of a brother officer of inferior rank, and apparently with his concurrence, with a kind of paternal authority over that lady, abused the opportunities afforded him by this trust, and by differences between the married parties, which it was his office to heal, to practise upon the affections of the wife; when detected by the husband, he refused to quit his house, and, being menaced with a loaded pistol to enforce the command, in the presence of the wife and the household, beat the husband, whom he finally, by virtue of his superior military rank, in the husband's own house, placed under arrest! We have read the evidence taken by the court-martial, in which these facts appear to be proved beyond a doubt, and even with aggravations; we have also read the long defence of Major Bartleman, expecting at least some palliation or extenuation of his offence; but, with pain and astonishment, we have found, instead, a feeble tissue of special pleading, and a criticism upon the testimony of his accuser, with the view of reducing the military quality of the offence—his “folly, his delinquency, his weakness,” being confessed and deplored by Major Bartleman, who, nevertheless, contends that he “has not forfeited the character of an officer and a gentleman, in the fullest sense of those honourable terms.”

The Court took a different view of his conduct, and the Commander-in-Chief has confirmed their decision.

INDIAN COTTON.

No. V.

WE have now ascertained that the most operative, as well as most obvious, causes of the bad reputation which attaches to the Indian cotton in England are the following:—

1. The negligent manner in which the wool is collected in the field, stored, and packed.

2. The fraudulent adulterations and sophistications it undergoes in passing through the hands of native agents, and in its conveyance to the port of shipment.

3. The pernicious system of advances by middlemen, who have no direct interest in maintaining the quality of the cotton; but, on the contrary, who derive from its debasement a dishonest profit.

4. The derangement of the Indian cotton trade, owing to the consumers of the wool in England making that trade subservient to their peculiar interests in connection with the American cotton and money markets; so that the irregularity of demand operates as a constant check upon increased and improved cultivation, rendering it, in the words of Dr. Royle, “hopeless to induce the cultivator, or those to whom he sells his produce, to bring it in a cleaner state to market.”

Whilst developing these several causes of deterioration, we indicated the measures, apparently easy and simple, which would obviate them, and showed that the application of the remedies is more or less directly in the power of the English manufacturers and their agents, the English merchants in India. If more freedom of action were given to the latter,—the purveyors of cotton for the manufacturers at home,—and, instead of being fettered by limitations which prevent them from exercising a control over prices and quality, and sometimes leave them dependent upon the cotton to be found at Bombay, “whatever its quality,” they were instructed to be critical as to quality and liberal as to price, not accepting rubbish when first-rate wool might be had;—if the demand from England were more regular, so as to afford the grower of cotton some security against loss if he extended and improved his cultivation;—if the European merchant were brought into closer contact with the ryot, so as to banish the bunnias and wakarias;—lastly, if European agents were generally employed, and the grower were offered a premium upon wool carefully collected,—the clean wool yielding more than an equivalent for the premium;—if all these measures, which we have suggested en passant, were adopted, Indian cotton would enjoy a very different reputation in the market.

These measures may be accompanied by others, which we proceed to notice under their respective heads.

8. Leases.

Supposing the middlemen to be got rid of, and bond fide purchasers of the cotton to be brought into immediate contact with the ryots, it does not appear that the latter need any aid for the improvement of their cultivation (which is sufficiently skilful and economical), except capital. The Cotton Committee add “certainty of tenure;” but in fact the tenure of the Indian cultivator is sufficiently certain; generally speaking, he possesses tenant right, or fixity of tenure, in more than the Irish sense of the term. In the unsettled districts, at least, he has no landlord besides the Government, and cannot be ejected. So long as he pays his rent, he is undisturbed in his occupancy.

Some persons have deplored the want of a landlord class in India, and have ascribed the alleged backwardness of cultivation to that source; but political economists, and Mr. J. S. Mill amongst the number, are beginning to discard the old theory of a threefold agricultural classification, of landlord, farmer, and labourer, for what is termed, in some adjoining countries, la petite culture, by peasant proprietors, or cottier tenants, which is very nearly the ancient Indian system: peasant proprietorship is considered to have been the prevailing tenure in the greater part of India. Mr. Mill suggests, and strongly recommends, the cultivation of whole parishes by one large associate corporation, in which every member should receive a share of the profits, as an "organization of industry" that would combine all interests, and exclude the disturbing relations of landlord, tenant, and labourer. This is precisely the Indian village-system.

The suggestion of the Committee was founded upon the advantage proved to have accrued from granting leases, limiting the demands of the Government to a certain rate for a certain term of years. In most districts of India, according to Mr. Shaw, there has always been much land held upon cowle, or a graduated lease, under which the land has been exempt from assessment for two or three years. Mr. Mangles recommends settlements with the cultivators for periods of thirty years, upon the principle of ascertaining the proper rent, and fixing from sixty-five to seventy-five per cent. of that amount. The system of thirty years' leases has been adopted in the Deccan and Southern Mahratta country, as well as in the North-West Provinces, and it has been found to answer so well that it is being extended to other parts of the country as fast as possible. A fixed sum is levied upon the village, or upon each field, unalterable for thirty years; or, if it be waste land, a lease of it is granted free of rent for two or three years, and then the assessment is gradually increased, according to the difficulty of clearing the land, to its full amount.

That the Indian Government have been favourable to "long leases" is apparent from the Despatch of the Court of Directors in 1837, quoted by the Cotton Committee, wherein they urge the policy of granting long leases as "recommended by general principle and general experience."

This is a subject which, in a certain degree, is connected with the vexed question, as to the system of collecting the Government assessment. "It is not enough," observes Mr. J. Crawford, "that the tax should be reduced within the bounds of the actual rent of land; it is necessary that the tax should be fixed, and that there should be no annual or frequent periodical inquisitions into the condition of the land and its occupants. It does not signify what the Government takes; but let it say what it is to take, and no more, so that the tenure of the occupant shall be a fixed and certain one."

9. Machinery.

The process of separating the cotton from the seed, technically termed "cleaning," is variously performed. The native methods are by the bow, the foot-roller, and the churka, or hand-roller. In the Mahratta country, and to the southward of Bombay, the foot-roller is in general use; in the north, throughout Guzerat, the churka is employed. The former is a small rod of iron, a little thicker in the middle than at the ends, which is turned round by the foot upon a smooth, hard stone, on which is placed a thin layer of the seeded cotton. The operation is performed generally by women, in the open air, so that the sun may harden the seeds and prevent their being crushed. The seeds pass out in front, and the cotton in a continuous web behind. The churka consists of two cylinders, the upper of iron, the lower of hard wood, turned by a wheel and handle, and revolving close together in different directions, which are made sufficiently rough to catch the fibres of the cotton, and drag them through, breaking off the seeds, which fall to the ground. Both these methods are slow; by the foot-roller the operator can clean from 6lbs. to 15lbs. of cotton a day; by the churka from 20lbs. to 40lbs. can be cleaned by two persons.

The introduction of the American saw-gin, with improvements, which accomplishes the work with far greater expedition, has greatly reduced the cost of this operation. The saw-gin, which can be made in India, is worked either by men or by bullocks. Mr. Petrie considers a small gin, of twenty-five saws, driven by men, the best, and cheaper than bullock labour. It is worked by four men, relieved by others; and sixteen men in one day could, from one gin, turn out 1,000lbs. of clean cotton; whereas by the churka they could clean only 400 lbs. Dr. Royle thinks the saw-gin not so well suited to the native cotton as to the American, and he sums up the advantages and disadvantages of this machine thus: "The advantages are that a large quantity of cotton can be cleaned in a very short time, and, having a number of gins, you can clean an immense quantity of cotton, so as to get the crop cleaned in time to send to be shipped, and save the monsoon. The disadvantage seems to be that it cuts the staple, and therefore I believe some spinners do not think it so good as the native cotton cleaned by the churka." Mr. Petrie, on the other hand, has proved that gin-cleaned cotton is preferred in England to the native cleaned, and sells to more advantage.

The saw-gin is now adopted by the natives, especially in Dharwar, to a considerable extent. The Bombay Times of July last says: "In the hands of private dealers and Government there are between seventy and eighty saw-gins, of different sizes, in Dharwar and Belgaum; in Candeish we have heard of one Bombay firm preparing forty large gins for the coming season, besides nearly thirty others which will be in the hands of Government and private native dealers, who have purchased them. The smaller-sized gins are purchased readily, and are willingly employed by the ryots; they clean, with two people, from nine to fourteen maunds a day." Another Bombay paper states the quantity of work actually performed by different machines in that part of the country, namely,—the gin of twenty saws cleans 1,040 lbs. of seed cotton per day; the cottage-gin, 120 lbs.; the churka, 40 lbs.; the first, at the rate of 13 lbs. per hour per man; the second 10 lbs., the third 4 lbs.

In respect to the machinery for cleaning, therefore, a proper impulse seems to have been given, and nothing more is required than that it should be kept up.

That the Government have always manifested the warmest desire and the utmost alacrity to promote improvements in the manipulation as well as culture of Indian cotton is evident from the collection of "Reports and Documents" published in 1836, one of which, a letter from the Court of Directors to the Governor in Council at Bombay, dated in 1829, announces the transmission of the American saw-gin, then recently invented. "Our letters," they say, "have acquainted you with the measures we are taking for obtaining from the United States of America various kinds of cotton seeds, as well as the most approved machines for cleaning cotton-wool from its seeds and impurities. We have received six of the machines called Whitney's saw-gin, two of which we shall transmit to your presidency with the cotton seeds. We have caused a trial to be made in our presence of the working of the saw-gin upon a small quantity of Indian cotton happening to be in our warehouses, which had been very imperfectly, if at all, divested of seeds, and although this experiment was made under the disadvantage of the cotton being old, very dry, and much pressed together, the result seemed entirely to establish the merit of the invention. We are strongly impressed with the opinion, that nothing but attention and perseverance is required to make Indian cotton-wool a productive article of export to Europe, and there is no commercial object connected with our Indian possessions of greater national importance. We desire, therefore, that the arrival of the saw-gins in India be made matter of general publicity."

10. Roads.

In the defective means of transport we discover a very serious impediment to the prosperity of the Indian cotton trade, and herein the Government cannot be absolved from blame. In the cotton districts in the west of India, the roads, if they may be so called, are described as execrable; and Mr. Williamson, General Briggs, and other witnesses, consider this as one of the great obstacles in the way of the trade. Even Mr. Mangles believes "that the great cause of the unduly high price of Indian cotton at the port of shipment arises from the expense of bringing it down, far more than from any of the other causes to which it has been attributed." This state of the communications has been notorious; it has been notorious that the condition of the roads has not merely occasioned delay and expense, but the deterioration of the cotton; yet, according to Mr. Shaw, "until lately there has been very little in the way of roads done" in the important part of India just referred to. This is a branch of "public works" which, in that country, can only be performed by the Government, and the neglect is inexcusable. In the Vedic times (twelve centuries before Christ), the Hindus appear to have had better roads than now, for one of the Hymns in the Rig-Veda offers thanks to the deity Agni for "pleasant fields and good roads." The plea of want of funds is inadmissible; funds are found for military operations of very doubtful necessity, and had one-half of the amount expended in the unnecessary and ignominious expedition into Afghanistan been applied to the making of good roads in India, the Government would,—though merely discharging their duty,—have benefited the cotton cultivation more sensibly than by the establishment of experimental cotton farms, great as their benefit has been, whilst they would have advanced their own fiscal interests. Had they levied tolls upon new or improved roads,—a suggestion sanctioned by the Cotton Committee,—there is reason to believe that such an impost, which is not repugnant to native customs,—though Mr. Mangles thinks it would be, "upon the whole," injudicious,—would have defrayed the cost.

All authorities concur in stating that a railway communication would not only be the greatest blessing conferred upon the inhabitants of India, but, by rendering the conveyance of cotton and other goods from the place of growth rapid and cheap, would be of immense advantage in developing the resources of the country. "I know nothing," says Mr. R. Crawford, "that would contribute to develop the internal resources of the country between Bombay and the north-east and south-east, where there are no navigable rivers, so much as railway communications." Mr. Chapman, manager of the Great Peninsular Railway Company, calculates that by that line 18,000 tons (or 40,000,000 lbs.) of cotton will come annually. He says that, in the Bombay Presidency, the made roads do not exceed 660 miles, and that the greater part of the traffic of the country is carried on in "tracks," scarcely to be called roads, over many of which carts could not pass. The cost of carriage of merchandize across the Ghauts is from 3½d. to 8d. per ton per mile, according to quantity and description of goods, and the available means of conveyance. In the level districts in the interior, the cost is from 2½d. to 5d.; on cotton from Berar, it ranges from 1½d. to 8d., but on a fair average of years, 3d. The improvement in the means of conveyance, and the consequent reduction of the cost of carriage, he thinks the reason why, in spite of a constant fall of prices, India has continued to export increasing quantities of cotton: including the fall of freights, he estimates the total saving in charges between the grower in India and the manufacturer in England at 5½d. per lb. of cotton,—a powerful incentive to further improvements in the same direction. Mr. Chapman considers the wretched state of the means of transit to be a chief cause of the supply of Indian cotton being so small in quantity and so inferior in quality. It not only increases, he says, the cost of carriage, and damages the article, but it diminishes the power of the cultivators to adopt an improved cultivation, and keeps down their artizanship to a low point.

The cotton of Western India is either brought by sea, from the small bunders, to Bombay, in native vessels; or by land in carts, or on the backs of bullocks, for want of proper roads, each bullock carrying 240 lbs. The cotton from Dharwar to Compta (110 miles) was, two years ago, carried all the way on the backs of bullocks. In this awkward mode of transit, besides the delay and trouble of unloading and loading, the cotton is liable to get soiled by unavoidable exposure, and damaged by carelessness and fraud.

The reduction of charge upon the cotton (besides expedition in the transit) is of great importance, because, in the opinion of some witnesses, the whole question is more one of price than of quality. If the cost of the cotton grown on the western side of India, especially in Berar, Mr. Crawford says, can be so reduced as to render the importer in England in a great measure independent of the crops in America, the grower will have an inducement, which he has not now, to extend the cultivation and improve the quality of the cotton; and he calculates that, if there was a railway from Bombay to Kamgaum, the cotton of Berar could be brought to Liverpool, paying original cost, transport, freight, and all charges abroad and at home, at less than 2½d. per lb., which (as shown in the last paper) is less than the cost of production of cotton in America.

In every point of view, therefore, an improvement of the means of communication and transit is essential to the prosperity of the Indian cotton trade; and one is disposed to inquire whether any and what degree of co-operation has been afforded by the Manchester manufacturers in carrying out the schemes projected by individuals in this country for constructing railroads in India.

Undertakings of this nature are not in the category of ordinary roads, but are properly left in the hands of individuals; the Government of India, however, gave their cordial and utmost assistance to all practicable schemes for Indian railroads, having made grants of the land, and guaranteed to the shareholders a dividend of 5 per cent. on their subscriptions. It might be expected that the manufacturers of Manchester would, under such circumstances, enter with alacrity into a project calculated to realize their professed views without any pecuniary loss; but it is not so. Upon this head, Mr. Turner, Chairman of the Manchester Commercial Association, was interrogated by the Cotton Committee of 1848. He was asked whether he did not make representations to the East-India Company on the subject of communications in India; he replied that he did, thinking "that the want of sufficient roads is one of the main obstacles to a very great increase in the supply of cotton from that country;" and that he suggested to the Company in particular the making of railroads. He admitted that he had had several communications with the parties interested in the Great Indian Peninsular Railway, but he evinced a strange reluctance to speak upon this matter, observing, rather testily, when pressed, "I came here to speak on the subject of cotton cultivation in India," as if he now thought this matter had nothing to do with it! The Committee, however, continued to urge him. "From the interest felt in Lancashire with regard to cotton, do you think it probable," he was asked, "if a fair arrangement were made between any railway company that proposed to carry a railway into the cotton districts of India and the East-India Company, that the spinners and manufacturers of Lancashire would be disposed to assist such company, by becoming proprietors, for the purpose of having that railway made?" Mr. Turner's answer is, that he does not think they would; that, though aware of the importance of bringing the staple commodity in which they are interested to market, his firm would not take any shares, even if 5 per cent. were guaranteed!

Our remarks upon this head should not be closed without a distinct recognition of the efforts at length made by the Indian Government to remedy the want of communications. The road from Compta to the Dharwar frontier is being converted into a good carriage road, and important works for the same purpose are also in progress, or are about to be proceeded with, in the districts of Candeish, Canara, Malabar, and Coimbatore.

11. Other remedial measures.

Amongst these may be included, the use of more efficient screwing machines for rough-pressing the cotton, before it is despatched to the port of shipment; the erection of suitable sheds or warehouses in which to deposit it; the employment of covered carts for its conveyance; the construction of good piers at the stations of shipment, and the employment of steam coasting-vessels.

The Bombay Committee observe that, with an extensive demand, a remunerating price, a facility of transit and shipment, the investment of capital in the cultivation, and a rapid communication between the districts where the cotton is grown and the mart where it is sold, all the minor causes of depreciation,—the faulty modes of gathering and preparation, the designed adulteration, the want of adequate buildings and mechanism, even the baneful system of the sahbookars,—would be gradually overcome.

This Committee consider that most of these objects,—even the erection of sheds and warehouses,—fall within the function of the Government. But it may be a question whether the Government has not already assumed in this matter too many of the offices which properly belong to individuals. The Government have, at their own expense, established experimental farms, introduced American seeds and gins, employed American instructors, and patronized every endeavour to improve the culture and preparation of Indian cotton; but the expectation that the Government will do everything tends to forestal the enterprise and check the energy of individuals, which are the surest, nay the only, means of success. "This constant reliance on Government for everything in India," observes a recent Calcutta journal,—the Friend of India,—"is the great bane of all improvement; it is that which keeps the country in a state of perpetual inferiority. Whatever at the present time is valuable in the manufactures and trade of India is owing entirely to private enterprise, and not to the officious and fostering care of Government. The duty of the Government may be considered as almost entirely of a negative character; that duty consists simply in removing every obstacle to improvement, by making the assessment of the land moderate, and by providing, through its institutions, the greatest security for life and property. The active duties of improvement belong to the community, and where public spirit, and energy, and perseverance are wanting, all the Reports of all the Government Committees will not raise a single cargo of cotton. If the merchants will set their own shoulders to the wheel, they will soon get the cart on."

The result of our inquiry, then, is this: that there are no insurmountable obstacles to the successful competition of the Indian with the American cotton; that there is nothing in the "economical" condition of the people of India, who are apt and skilful husbandmen, which prevents the extension and permanence of the cotton cultivation; that the land-assessment,—a moderate rent, exempting the ryot from taxation,—has nothing to do with the question; that the want of cleanliness, and other drawbacks upon the quality of the Indian cotton, are accidental causes of deterioration, removable by European agency, and by that alone; that, with the single exception of roads, in which respect they have been negligent of their duty, the Government of India are chargeable with no backwardness to promote the prosperity of the Indian cotton trade, such backwardness, if imputable to any body of individuals, may most justly, as we have shown in the course of these papers, be laid to the account of the manufacturers of Manchester.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SIR W. R. GILBERT.—The Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a Baronet of the United Kingdom to Major-General Sir Walter Raleigh Gilbert, G.C.B. Dec. 31.

SIR J. E. TENNENT.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Sir James Emerson Tennent, Knt., to be Governor of St. Helena. Dec. 31.

"LIFE IN INDIA."—An entertainment peculiarly suited to those who have been in India, or who have friends and relatives in the country, has been opened at Willis's Rooms. It consists of twenty-four magnificent illustrations of an imaginary tour in India, and serves to introduce a number of popular views and subjects,—such as Bombay, Madras, Calcutta, the Taj at Agra, Delhi, a Cutchery, a Nautch, a Banian Tree, Officers' Quarters, a Drawing Room, &c. Mr. Stocqueler, whose lectures at the Gallery of Illustrations did so much for the "Overland Diorama," officiates as exponent of the subjects of "Life in India" in a very pleasant manner, carrying the spectator along with him on an imaginary tour from Calcutta to Lahore, round to Bombay and Madras, and so back to Calcutta. The whole exhibition is a capital sequel to the overland route. The one shows us the road to the country,—the present displays the country itself.

CHARACTERISTICS OF THE THREE KINGDOMS.—A work under this title has just made its appearance, in parts or numbers, consisting of graphic designs by Mr. F. H. T. Bellew, with descriptions by Capt. Bellew, and representing certain classes of the three kingdoms, which possesses much merit. The first part portrays to the life the English "Navvies," the Cadies, or Edinburgh Porters, and the Irish Peasant. The last, in particular, is an admirable picture, full of humour and character.

STEAM TO AUSTRALIA.—We are assured from an accredited source, that the long pending and hitherto perplexing and provoking negotiations between the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the promoters of steam communication with our colonies in the Southern Pacific have once more been energetically renewed, and with every prospect of a speedy and satisfactory issue. The East-India Company, we learn, have agreed to remove the great stumbling-block that has so long stood between the desire or Government to do what their sense of duty to Australia in this matter prompted, and what their obligations under the Leadenhall Street immunities demanded. The Company consent to the almost immediate surrender of their monopoly of the Bombay and Suez line, thus leaving the hands of the Executive free to deal with the subject on its own merits, and to enter into such contracts with private individuals as may seem best to meet the exigencies of the case. Government are now at liberty to act upon their convictions, which, it seems generally understood, are in favour of the route via Singapore, by the Peninsular and Oriental steamers. We trust that this will be but the speedy precursor of mail communication also by the Cape and Panama; for the rapidly-growing importance of our trade with Australia and New Zealand, as shown even in the emigration from Liverpool, though but the growth of a day, as it were, not only warrants but requires the extension of every facility for intercourse with these magnificent dependencies.—Liverpool Albion.

THE SHIP "ESSEX" has been engaged for the conveyance of stores to Calcutta.

THE ISTHMUS OF PANAMA.—In a paper read before the Royal Geographical Society, by Capt. R. Fitzroy, on the 2nd inst., the four principal lines proposed for crossing the Isthmus of Panama were reviewed, namely, the Mexican, the Nicaragua, the Panama, and the Atrato. The Mexican line was shown to be unsuited for the general intercourse of the world; its high level, length, and situation, besides the want of ports, are against its general utility. In any route taken through the great lake of Nicaragua, three States are immediately concerned,—that just mentioned, Costa Rica, and Mosquitia. The country is very volcanic; many locks, viaducts, and bridges would be necessary for either canal or railway, and the length of such works must be great. There is a deficiency of harbours on this line. The lake is shallow near its shores, and exposed to violent winds. The Panama line is short, and a railroad seems feasible; but it wants good ports. A railway is in progress by an American company, who have made very exclusive terms with New Granada. The Atrato river and the isthmus between the Gulf of Darien and Cupica Bay (on the Pacific, in 6° N. lat.) are described as offering encouragement to a ship-canal on the largest scale, but not to a railway. Other routes are suggested—from Caledonia Bay to San Miguel Gulf, from San Blas to Chepo, and from Chiriqui to Dulie Gulf. Preference is given to Panama for a railroad, but to Darien for a canal.

BOOKS.

An Analytical Digest of all Reported Cases decided in the Supreme Courts of Judicature in India, in the Courts of the Hon. East-India Company, and, on Appeal from India, by Her Majesty in Council: together with an Introduction, Notes, Illustrative and Explanatory, and an Appendix. By WILLIAM H. MORLEY, of the Middle Temple, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, M.R.A.S., &c. Two vols. London. Wm. H. Allen and Co.

So very difficult an undertaking, as that of making a Digest of the decisions in all the Indian Courts, could not have fallen into more competent hands than those of Mr. Morley, who, being an English barrister, conversant with the peculiar laws administered in India, is likewise critically acquainted with Oriental languages. The impediments encountered by students of Indian law, in the want of elementary and comprehensive works upon the subject, are shown by Mr. Morley, in a few words, in his comprehensive Introduction: "The laws themselves are so diverse and complicated, and are spread over such a multitude of volumes, that, in the absence of such works, a long course of laborious investigation and patient study becomes requisite before the student can see his way through the mass of legislation, which must appear to all, at the outset, an impenetrable chaos." But a knowledge of the laws leaves the student, and even the judge, imperfectly instructed without the decisions of competent Courts, which contain practical expositions of the law, illustrating doctrines and fixing principles; this most important guide has, accordingly, been furnished Mr. Morley, who has combined with the few printed decisions a number of unpublished notes of cases, in a copious Digest, admirably analyzed and lucidly arranged, with full references to reporters, &c.

This Digest, however, forms only a portion of his valuable work. In the Introduction, which occupies 300 pages and upwards, he gives a history of the different Courts of Judicature in India, with a description of their powers, jurisdictions, and systems of administering the law, including the Supreme Courts, and the Sudder and Mofussil Courts, at all the Presidencies; of the appellate tribunal at home, and the mode of procedure in appeals to the Privy Council; lastly, he treats at much length of the laws peculiar to India. Under this head, Mr. Morley has accumulated a fund of information infinitely valuable, not only to the student of Indian law, but to all classes of practitioners, indicating the sources of the Hindu and Muhammadan law respectively, their several schools, law books, &c.

His remarks upon the recent Act xxi. of 1850, passed by the Legislative Council of India, extending the Bengal Regulation of 1832, in relation to the Hindu law of inheritance and exclusion from caste, in the case of converts, are not favourable to the policy of this bold step in Indian legislation.

"The policy of the enactment of this law," he says, "is perhaps questionable: the beneficial results expected from its operation are at least doubtful. I allude, of course, to its anticipated effect in increasing the number of converts to Christianity. If it be true that the disinheritation, which, by the Hindu law, follows apostasy, militates against conversion to the truth,—that is, in other words, that many Hindus would become Christians were it not for the prospect of the loss they would thereby sustain,—the question arises, in the first place, whether it be desirable to receive such lukewarm believers into our Church? As well might we offer bounty-money to recruit the ranks of Christianity from the multitudes who would be willing to make a traffic of their consciences. Again, it is not reasonable to suppose that any great accession will be made to the number of converted Hindus by the operation of this new law. The converts from the Hindu creed to Muhammadanism have of late years been very numerous; indeed, it is to be feared, far more numerous than those who have rewarded the labours of our missionaries by embracing the Christian religion; and this, be it observed, notwithstanding the Hindu law of forfeiture which has been denounced as holding so chief a place amongst the preventives of conversion. From this it may fairly be inferred that the comparative ill-success of the missionaries arises, not from the disabilities under which apostates and outcasts labour according to the Hindu law, but rather from the fact, that the Muhammadan priest, however inferior in general education, has a much greater knowledge of the people with whom he has to deal, and consequently a stronger hold upon their minds and imaginations, than that possessed by the Christian pastor."

The second volume of the work consists of Notes of Decided Cases from the year 1813 to the present time, comprising some very important judgments by Chief Justices Sir E. H. East and Sir E. Perry; papers, hitherto unpublished, upon the Police of Bombay, and the Charters of the Supreme Courts at the three Presidencies.

ORIENTAL LANGUAGES.

HINDUSTANI, PERSIAN, ARABIC, SANSKRIT, &c., Taught, on Moderate Terms, at No. 58, Burton Crescent, from 10 A.M. to 1 P.M., by DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D., Professor of Oriental Languages in the King's College, London; Member of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland; Member of the Asiatic Society of Paris, and Author of the following Works, just published, on the HINDUSTANI and PERSIAN LANGUAGES.

A DICTIONARY, HINDUSTANI-ENGLISH

AND ENGLISH-HINDUSTANI.

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.

FROM THE "FRIEND OF INDIA," published at Serampore.

"The present volume, by Dr. Forbes, we regard as an inestimable contribution to our Oriental literature, and worthy of a more extended notice than we can give to such a work. To compose a lexicon of the Hindustani tongue, suited to the present advanced state of this and kindred studies, demands in its author an uncommon share of learning and critical sagacity,—that he be cautious, well practised in analysis and arrangement, with ability to assign to secondary and figurative meanings a due position, a philosophical classification under their proper themes. To this part of the task Dr. Forbes has brought rare qualifications, many years' experience, great aptness in teaching the Oriental tongues, much tact with respect to the kind and degree of help required to their thorough mastery. He has already done good service; his former works have stimulated many to acquire that knowledge which is essential to an efficient discharge of the various offices of trust and responsibility of every Indian resident. To say that it is an entirely new work would be to claim for it an equivocal character; but we say it is a matchless production of its kind, every way calculated to sustain its author's well-earned reputation. The plan and principal authorities are fully detailed in the preface, to which we refer our readers; the classical works have been diligently explored; the more modern and valuable works of Thompson, Herkots, Cox, and H. M. Elliot, have been laid under contribution for particular terms and local usage; the aim has been to compile a thoroughly usable and economical book. The words are given in alphabetical order; the leading word, and the meaning of which it, its derivatives and compounds, are susceptible, are given with great care;—in a word, if condensation and definiteness, if due distinction between the provinces of a grammarian and lexicographer, if to avoid faults, to reject things of a doubtful utility, to supply deficiencies, and to do all this with a determination that typography, paper, and price shall be unexceptionable,—if these in combination be recommended to an author and his work, then Dr. Forbes's Dictionary is fully worthy of the patronage of the patrons and students of Hindustani literature. We have to add, for we must not omit to mention, that it contains a second part, or a reversed dictionary—a very valuable companion indeed."

Inventor of the Patent Castulated Tooth-Brush.

. All articles warranted to stand an Indian climate.

HAILEYBURY COLLEGE.—A Married Clergyman, M.A. of Oxford, who has long prepared for the preliminary examination with marked success, will have vacancies after Christmas for pupils above 12 and under 17 years of age. His system of instruction ensures the most rapid progress. The judicious course of study required by the H.E.I.C. of candidates for Haileybury is equally desirable for general students, but in case of such applicants, the recommendation of a Director or Member of Parliament is required.

Address Rev. H. M. A., Messrs. W. H. Allen & Co., 7, Leadenhall Street.

DRAFTS and LETTERS of CREDIT on CALCUTTA, MADRAS, and BOMBAY, are granted by Messrs. GRINDLAY & Co., in sums to suit the convenience of applicants, without any charge for commission. Also, CIRCULAR LETTERS of CREDIT for Travellers on the Continent, available in every principal town in Europe. EAST-INDIA ARMY AGENCY, 69, Cornhill, and 124, Bishopsgate Street.

East-India Company, 58, SKINNER STREET, SNOW HILL, LONDON.

The excellent shooting of Beckwith's Rifles is established by upwards of fifty years' experience. B. and Son being manufacturers, they are enabled to offer Double-barrel Rifles, suitable for the Colonies, at very low prices, and warranted to shoot well. Double and Single-Barrel Fowling-pieces, Pistols, &c., of all descriptions.

DUNN'S FINE ARGAND LAMP OIL, 4s. 6d. per gallon.—This very superior oil, so largely patronized and recommended by the nobility and gentry, is equally applicable for the Argand, Solar, French Fountain, and every description of Patent Oil Lamps. Its characteristics are the strength and brilliancy of light, without smoke or smell; extreme purity, as it will not corrode the most delicate lamp; greater economy, in the slowness of consumption, compared with other oils, and not chilling with the cold. Half a gallon or upwards delivered free seven miles.

Sold only genuine by JOHN DUNN and Co., Oil Merchants, 59, Cannon Street, City.

CHEAP, LIGHT, AND DURABLE ROOFING.

CROGGON'S PATENT ASPHALTE ROOFING FELT has been extensively used and pronounced efficient, and particularly applicable for warm climates.

1st. It is a non-conductor.

2nd. It is portable, being packed in rolls, and not liable to damage in carriage.

3rd. It effects a saving of half the timber usually required.

4th. It can be easily applied by any unpractised person.

5th. From its lightness, weighing only about 42 lb. to the square of 100 feet, the cost of carriage is small.

INDEROUS FELT, for damp walls and for damp floors, under carpets and floor-cloths.

Price ONE PENNY PER SQUARE FOOT.

CROGGON and Co.'s PATENT FELTED SHEATHING, for covering Ships' Bottoms, &c., and

DRY HAIR FELT, for covering Steam-boilers, Pipes, &c.; preventing the radiation of Heat, and saving 25 per cent. of Fuel.

TO LATE RESIDENTS IN INDIA.—

TRUE MADRAS CURRY, and MULLIGATAWNEY PASTE and CHUTNIES.—Messrs. BARRIE and Co., Vepery, Madras, to enable their old correspondents returning from India to continue the use of the celebrated Condiments, have made arrangements to forward regular supplies of the above, packed in glass jars for family use, at 1s. 9d. and upwards, which may be had of CROSSE and BLACKWELL, Purveyors to Her Majesty, 21, Soho Square; FORTNUM, MASON, and Co., Piccadilly; and of the principal Sauce Vendors throughout the kingdom. Each bottle is labelled, and BARRIE and Co., Madras, stamped on the glass.

THE BEST INDIAN CURRY POWDER, UNEQUALLED FOR GENUINE FLAVOUR.

In 1 lb. Bottles, 3s. 6d.; $\frac{1}{2}$ lb., 2s. 3d.; and $\frac{1}{4}$ lb., 1s. 6d.; or 7 lbs. for 21s.

INDIAN CURRY SAUCE, of superior quality.—This novel and piquant Sauce, now introduced to the English public for the first time, is peculiarly adapted for Steaks, Chops, Game, Fish, Cold Meats, Hash, &c. The addition of a little of this Sauce, in cases where a curry cannot be procured, will prove to connoisseurs a valuable accompaniment.

DELHI CHUTNEE, TAPONIAN SAUCE, and all other Condiments, from Calcutta direct.

PAYNE and Co.'s ROYAL POLYTECHNIC TEA and FOREIGN ESTABLISHMENT, 324, 326, and 328, REGENT STREET.

THE NEW TOOTH-PICK TOOTH-BRUSH,

thoroughly cleansing between the teeth when used up and down, and polishing the surface when used crossways, the hair warranted never to come out; in four strengths—vis. No. 1, hard; No. 2, less hard; No. 3, medium; No. 4, soft. The double anti-pressure nail-brush, which does not divide the quick from the nails. The triple hair-brush, which thoroughly searches and cleanses the hair in one-fourth part of the time of any other method, and acts as both comb and brush combined. The medium shaving-brush, being a selection of the strongest badgers' hair, so well secured in the socket as never to come loose. And, though last not least, the newly-invented "Renovator" clothes-brush, which makes an old coat look like a new one, and a new coat to look new double the usual time. Invented and made only by ROSS and SONS.

THE ATAPILATORY, or LIQUID HAIR DYE.—The only dye that really answers for all colours, and does not require re-doing but as the hair grows, as it never fades or acquires that unnatural red or purple tint common to all other dyes. ROSS and SONS can, with the greatest confidence, recommend the above DYE as infallible; and ladies and gentlemen requiring it are requested, if convenient, to have it done the first time at their establishment, which will enable them to use it afterwards themselves, without the chance of failure. They think it necessary to add, that, by attending strictly to the instructions given with the dye, numerous parties have succeeded equally well without coming to them.

BOTANIC WATER and BEARS' GREASE.—When the hair is becoming thin, and falling off, the only effectual remedy, besides shaving the head, is the use of the two above-named articles, applied alternately—the botanic water to cleanse the roots from scurf, and as a stimulant, and the bears' grease as a nourisher. If any further evidence was required of the virtues of bears' grease for renovating and preserving the hair, Mr. Catlin's account of the quantity used, and the length of hair obtained, by some of the North-American Indians, would be a sufficient answer.—ROSS and SONS, who first introduced the use of bears' grease in this country, and who fat and kill the animals, recommend the public to purchase none other but with their names and address printed on the pot, or the chances are, their obtaining a spurious article.

ROSS and SONS, 119 and 120, Bishopsgate Street, London.

Medical Officer—John Grant, Esq., Apothecary-General.
Bankers—Bank of Bengal. Solicitors—Messrs. Frith & Sandes.

This Society offers a lower and more economical scale of Premiums for Life Assurance than hitherto demanded by the established Offices in India.

Annual Premium for assuring 1,000 rupees:—

CIVIL.			MILITARY AND NAVAL.
Age.	With Profits.	Without Profits.	Age.	With Profits.	Without Profits.
20	Rs. 33	Rs. 31	20	Rs. 38	Rs. 35
30	38	35	30	44	41
40	49	45	40	53	49
50	63	59	50	66	61
60	82	77	60	81	79

All holders of Policies in India on the Profit scale, who may have paid five annual premiums, will be entitled, at the expiration of the fifth year, to a year's profit, calculated on the average of the preceding five years; such profit to be paid in cash, or to go in diminution of the future premiums payable, or to be added to the sum assured by the policy, at the option of the holder, after the calculation of the profits shall have been made in London.

After the expiration of 1851, the profits will be declared annually, and the payers of five complete annual premiums be regularly entitled to a participation therein, with a like option as to the mode of application.

Parties assured in India for Life shall, on their return to England for a permanency, and on the first half-yearly premium becoming due, be entitled to come upon the English rates of premium, and be placed under the rules and conditions of the Society there obtaining.

All parties assured for Life, or for terms other than for Life, whatever the number of payments, or the permanency or otherwise of their residence in Europe, shall, after completing a full year from the date of their quitting India, and on the first half-yearly premium thereafter becoming due, be entitled to a reduction of their premium to the English rates, such reduced rates being continued during their further residence in Europe.

Notices of Assignments of Policies will be duly registered at the Office of the Secretaries.

The Society also grants ENDOWMENTS and DEFERRED ANNUITIES for India, the Tables for which, with full information, may be had at the Office of the Family Endowment Society, No. 12, Chatham Place; or at the Office of the Secretaries in Calcutta, Messrs. GORDON, STUART, and Co.

AFTER 13 YEARS' SUFFERING, A BAD LEG HAS BEEN CURED BY HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT & PILLS. Mrs. Anne Smith, of Hemel Hempstead, suffered with wounds in her leg for 13 years, during which period she was under some of the cleverest surgeons of the age, both in town and country; and notwithstanding all their experience, none of them could heal this dreadful bad leg. Mrs. Smith, finding all their remedies useless, was persuaded to give Holloway's Ointment and Pills a trial, and these medicines cured her in an incredibly short space of time, and she now feels pleasure in boasting of the wonderful efficacy of Holloway's Ointment and Pills.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London, and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

VARICOSE VEINS, WEAKNESS, FRACTURES, SPRAINS, &c.

HUXLEY'S SURGICAL CAOUTCHOUC ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE-CAPS, &c. are now daily patronized by all the leading members of the profession. Their superiority over every other fabric for artificial support is admitted by all who inspect them. They afford an equal, comforting, and permanent pressure on every portion of the limb, and are drawn on with the facility of an ordinary stocking. H. and Co. guarantee a comfort and support hitherto unknown in any other form of bandage. It is well known that all kinds of Surgical Stockings lately used have a tendency to impede the free and healthy action of the muscles, thereby producing relaxation and great diminution of the limb. Only to be obtained at HUXLEY'S Parisian Shirt Warehouse, 5, Vere Street, Cavendish Square.

KIDSTON'S MECHANICAL LEECH.

WM. KIDSTON and Co., 18, Bishopsgate Street Without, London, in directing the attention of the medical profession to their newly-invented instrument, termed "Kidston's Mechanical Leech," think it would be superfluous and presumptuous to make any comment in its behalf, further than drawing their attention to the testimonials in its favour, published in the "Lancet" of September 28, and in the Pharmaceutical Journal for October.

Full instructions for use will accompany the instruments.
Price per set of instruments, — i. e. three "Leeches," or Vacuum Glasses, with Puncturing Instrument, electro plated, in neat morocco case, complete, — £2. 5s.

APPOINTMENTS TO INDIA and the COLONIES.—

Cadets, Assistant-Surgeons, and others appointed to India, Officers joining their Regiments, and all those who have or who are expecting appointments to India, China, or to any other of the Colonies, may obtain Detailed Lists of the necessary Outfit for every appointment, full particulars of the Overland Route to India, Rates of Passage-Money, Allowance of Baggage, &c., on application to Messrs. THRESHER and GLENNY, East India and General Outfitters, 152, Strand, London. The only house in the kingdom where THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE WAISTCOAT can be procured.

EMIGRATION and COLONIZATION.

IMMIGRATION being much required in AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, &c., and as the supposed expense of an OUTFIT often prevents individuals emigrating, S. W. SILVER and Co., CLOTHIERS, OUTFITTERS, and CONTRACTORS (having a large interest to maintain in those Colonies), have been advised to make known that they can supply a comfortable OUTFIT, including Bedding, for MALE or FEMALE Emigrants, from Four Pounds (net) upwards, or less (Two Pounds if needful), and for Children in proportion to No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN (opposite the London Tavern), where lists will be given on application.

S. W. S. & Co., being the makers of nearly every article in all the Outfits they supply, and as one of their objects is to promote EMIGRATION, they neither receive from Agents, or pay the too usual commission to any person introducing Passengers to be fitted out, so that the Passage and Outfit may be procured at the least possible expense; but they will, on application, advise Passengers how to obtain the most economic passage to the Colonies. They have a Representative in every Australian Colony, to whom they ship Clothing monthly; thus they would forward small parcels free of expense.

NAVAL and MILITARY OFFICERS, MIDSHIPMEN, CADETS, CIVILIANS, LADIES, &c., are outfitted as heretofore, at the CABIN-PASSENGER OUTFITTING Warehouse, Nos. 65 and 67, CORNHILL (the Emigration Outfitting being exclusively at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN), LONDON, and each branch at ST. GEORGE'S CRESCENT, LIVERPOOL.

EAST-INDIA UNITED SERVICE AGENCY,

53, CHARING CROSS, and 25, SPRING GARDENS.

MAJOR R. D. WHITE (twenty-nine years in the Bengal Army) will be happy to receive gentlemen connected with India and the Colonies, or attend to their written communications.

Passages secured by Sea or overland; Houses or Apartments engaged; Regimental Messes; Wines and Stores; Outfits, &c., supplied; and every description of Agency business transacted.

No charge for subscription to the Agency or Rooms, but every information furnished.

EAST-INDIA ARMY and GENERAL AGENCY,

135, LEADENHALL STREET.

We have taken into partnership Mr. JAMES CUNDY, late of the Madras Army.

In thus having secured the services of a gentleman who, by long residence in India, has gained considerable practical knowledge, we feel that we have best consulted the interests of our old friends, and, we hope, show good reason for an accession of new.

On personal application at our office, or on inquiry by letter, every information and assistance will be given to parties arriving from or intending to embark for India, China, and the Colonies, and constituents in England will have prompt attention paid to their wishes, and will find in the Reading-room the latest newspapers, as well as every information they may require on all topics relating to India.

Detailed Estimates of Outfits for Writers, Cadets, and Assistant-Surgeons have been prepared with much care, showing the comparative expense between a journey overland, via Egypt, and a voyage by the long sea route.

Drafts and Letters of Credit on Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, and China, in large or small sums, are also granted at this Agency.

JAMES BARBER and Co.

EAST-INDIA AGENCY.

C. R. THOMPSON & Co., WINCHESTER HOUSE,
OLD BROAD STREET, LONDON,
And 10, ORIENTAL PLACE, SOUTHAMPTON.

The following are the objects to which the Agency is more particularly devoted:—

TO COMMISSION and Agency Business generally, whether intrusted to them by Civil or Military Officers of the Queen's or East-India Company's Services, or by Regiments, they give prompt and careful personal attention, at charges the most reasonable.

THE SUPERINTENDENCE of Outfits of every kind, securing Passages, shipping and insuring Baggage and Goods of every description, for all persons proceeding to any part of India, either by the Overland Route or by the Sea Voyage.

THE RECEIPT, at their London and Southampton Offices, of Letters and Parcels for India and elsewhere, and their transmission by the first opportunity after Receipt.

THE EXECUTION, on the best terms, of Orders of every description from India, especially Orders for Wines and Spirits, of which they keep in their Cellars a choice collection of every variety, expressly for their Indian Customers.

THE RECEPTION of the Wives and Children of Civil and Military Officers arriving from India, the Clearance of their Baggage, and its transmission to their destinations, and the placing of Children at Schools, whereat, according to the instructions and wishes of their Parents, the best education and training will be secured to them. The Receipt of Remittances for them while at home, and payment of Bills on their account.

THE RECEIPT also of Civil and Military Pay, Pensions, Annuities, Dividends, &c., by Power of Attorney; with the Execution of any other Business at the India House, Bank of England, or elsewhere.

Drafts and Letters of Credit on Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, granted for large or small sums.

Remittances, or reference for payment, will be necessary from those who have no open account with them.

ORIENTAL and GENERAL AGENCY.—G. W. WHEATLEY and Co. (late Waghorn and Co.) FORWARD PARCELS and PACKAGES OVERLAND (at very reduced rates) to INDIA and CHINA the 17th of every month; also to Australia, the West Indies, America, &c. Insurances effected. Baggage cleared and shipped. Moderate charges and rapid despatch characterize this Agency.—Offices, 156, Leadenhall Street, and Chaplin's, Regent Circus.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

"ALL our cotemporaries," says the Delhi Gazette, "whether in Bengal, Bombay, or Madras, are complaining of the dearth of news; all want some grievance to condemn, some improvement to dilate upon—in short, some extraordinary incentive to activity, by which their pens and their minds may be employed in some way profitable to themselves and instructive to their readers. To north, east, south, and west, we look with the same unsatisfactory result; there is nothing to write about."

To save the journals from utter inanition, the Wuzerees made a descent upon our frontier at Bunnoo, and though signally defeated, the incident serves to infuse some interest into this mail's intelligence. It appears that these tribes assembled on the 18th of November, in large masses, with the declared intention of attacking the frontier villages, and, crossing the Koorum river, in the hills, came down into the Goomutee Pass. The same night, a detached party advanced from the pass upon three of our villages; but the people, having anticipated the attack, were prepared, while the guards stationed in the towers of the villages kept up so hot a musketry fire on the marauders, that they retreated with the loss of eighteen killed and wounded. On our side, only one man was wounded. The entire body, on finding, that ample preparations had been made to support our advanced posts, and that Major Taylor was in the field, returned to their homes. The Punjab levies proved highly efficient.

The Lahore Chronicle, on the credit of a correspondent who has opportunities of forming a correct opinion, says, it is a mistake to suppose the Kutuks are our enemies; they are very well disposed to the British Government, in opposition to their chief, Khojah Mahomed Khan, of Teera, who is not popular amongst the lower class of cultivators. "They are a fine manly race, but probably have some characteristics in common with their neighbours, the Afreedees, the Bungushees, Wuzerees, and other hill tribes in those parts."

The advices from Hyderabad are of some importance. A letter, published by the Englishman, mentions that the Resident had warned the Nizam of the consequences which will attend his failure to pay the debt due to the British Government at the stipulated time, and that the Resident had notified, that his instructions enjoin him to close his official intercourse with the Nizam's Government if the payment be not made on the day appointed. A statement to the same effect appears in the Madras Spectator. The impression on the spot is said to be, that the occupation of some part of the Nizam's territories by a British force would follow. Sir George Berkeley, Commander-in-Chief of the Madras army, had reached Hyderabad on the 7th of December; and, coupling this fact with the alleged movement of troops, it would appear that something more than a threat is meant.

The distinction with which Sir George was received, not only at the capital, but throughout the Nizam's dominions, was highly flattering. Upon his crossing the Toombudra and Krishna rivers, he was received by Shir Affgun Jung, one of the Nizam's most considerable talookdars, with a large party of horse, ordered to escort his excellency to the capital. At Shumsabad, the two sons of Shums-ool-Oomra gave his excellency an English dinner and Hindustani zeeafut in splendid style; and these young noblemen, with Shir Affgun Jung, escorted him to the Residency palace.

"A small party of the 3rd Madras Cavalry were sent to meet him some miles on the road towards the capital. Some hundred of the splendid Contingent Cavalry, under Lieut. Campbell, awaited the arrival of the general on the Krishna, and escorted him to the capital, two miles from which he was met by Brigadier James and the Secunderabad Subsidiary Force Staff. A street was formed from the Residency western gate to the colonnaded parts of that noble building by the Madras 19th N.I., under Colonel Osborne, through which the whole of this varied cortège proceeded. A salute of seventeen guns welcomed his excellency. The suwarrees of Shums-ool-Oomra's sons, with their cavalry, very similar to that of the Contingent, and their camel corps, mounted with zumbooraks, of Shir Affgun Jung, the rich trappings and caparisons of the elephants, and their numerous flags, formed a splendid and dazzling medley, but rarely seen. Soon after the Commander-in-Chief's arrival, Secraj-ool-Moolk came to pay his respects to him. A splendid déjeuner was given by the Resident to his excellency (who is the guest of the former during his sojourn here, which, it is supposed, will extend to a month) and his staff, and to the Secunderabad staff and all field officers."

The up-country papers abound with details respecting the movements of the Governor-General through the Punjab, and the festivities that greeted him and his party at Lahore. His lordship arrived at Umritsur on the 21st November, where he visited all the public buildings, received the Panches of the city and several other visitors. On the night of the 22nd, a grand illumination took place in honour of his visit to this sacred city of the Sikhs. An eye-witness of the scene says:—"The sacred tank was beautifully lit up, and presented the prettiest spectacle I ever saw. The surface of the tank was covered with brilliant floating rafts, and illuminated turtles were swimming about in all directions. There was no end of fireworks from the tops of the different Boongals, and the whole city, especially the new lines of streets, were most tastefully lighted up." The marquess left Umritsur on the 26th, and on the ensuing morning his camp was pitched a short distance east of the garden of Shaleemar, which afforded in the evening a delightful walk, as the canals were full and the fountains playing in all directions. Next day, the camp proceeded to Anarkulee, his lordship and suite taking the lower road, and passing round the town. Nearly abreast of the Summun boorj a salute was fired, and a number of chiefs and others met the cortège, which they joined. The troops formed a continuous line from the hospital of H.M.'s 14th dragoons all along the road through the cantonments to the camp at Meean Meer, where his lordship and his suite breakfasted with Sir H. Lawrence. Lahore then became one continued scene of gaiety, dinners, balls, levees, crowded with "all the beauty and fashion" of the city, succeeding each other. The great attraction was the fête given by Col. Sir Henry Lawrence in the Soldiers' Garden, a noble institution of his own creation, to the European portion of the garrison of

Lahore, of which the Chronicle gives the following description:—

"The 1st Irregular Cavalry exhibited to a dense circle of European and native lookers-on of all ranks, the feats of horsemanship for which they used to be celebrated when under the gallant officer, who raised and commanded them for so many years. The rush of horsemen pursuing each other, the pursued hanging by his left hand and one stirrup, on the side of the horse, and defending himself, with his brandished sword in his right, was peculiarly exciting, while the old exercises of firing at a bottle and drawing tent-pegs from the ground with their lances at full speed were cleverly gone through. Races in sacks, climbing of poles (well greased), running after pigs with well-soaped tails, and the ordinary amusements available in the garden, occupied the rest of the afternoon, two bands playing at intervals. A little after sunset the various buildings in the garden, and the several raised eminences, were brilliantly illuminated, while a continued discharge of fireworks from an open space near the principal stand, was kept up for upwards of an hour. The happy groups of Europeans, many with their wives and families, for whose refreshment long tables and benches with fruit, &c. were spread out, and the immense concourse of European and native spectators, presented a 'spectacle' perhaps unique in the history of the European soldier in India."

The marquess was to remain eight or nine days at Lahore, and then proceed towards Wuzeerabad, to meet Maharajah Goolab Sing, a vakeel from whom (Dewan Joala Sabaie) arrived in Lahore to settle the preliminaries of his master's interview with the Governor-General. His lordship was by the last accounts at Soojanpoor, whither he had gone with the view of examining the spot fixed upon as the head of the Baree Doab Canal.

Goolab Sing had, it appears, reached Jumboo, from Sreenugur, on his way to Wuzeerabad. The Lahore Chronicle, December 7, says:—

"Although there is but very little doubt that the Governor-General will be invited by his highness to return his visit at Kashmeer, much, we are informed, still depends on the manner in which the invitation will be couched. If proffered frankly and sincerely, it will be accepted in the same spirit; but any appearance of hesitation on the part of the wily old chief will be construed into a wish that the hospitality so tendered should be declined, as it will be in the manner becoming the representative of her Majesty in this country. If the invitation be accepted, the visit to Kashmeer will be undertaken about the end of March, on the return of the camp from Peshawur. It has been resolved, we believe, under any circumstances, that no ladies shall accompany the camp, and the Baramoola route taken as the one least likely to offer any serious obstacles at that time of the year."

Sickness had not disappeared from the Punjab stations, and had but little abated amongst the military at Lahore. The Chronicle of December 4th says:—

"The number of sick in the first European Fusiliers has, we are happy to say, somewhat diminished. According to our previous report, it extended to 343 men. On the 29th of November it had fallen to 299, with six officers. The number of deaths, during the previous week, had been five. In the artillery (foot) the number was stationary with two deaths; in the dragoons nearly the same, but no deaths; in the horse artillery it had increased from 25 to 31, no deaths; while in the native corps of all arms the numbers had decreased from 687 to 610, with the increasing proportion of thirteen deaths."

The same paper of the 7th, the latest date, makes the following report:—

"The first regiment of Bengal Fusiliers were, according to the latest arrangements, to march this morning from their camp at Meean Meer into Anarkulee, where they will remain until the arrival of H.M.'s 96th foot, now at Cawnpoor, who have been ordered up to take their place. Major Warner's troop of horse artillery, and a company of foot artillery, have left their barracks in Anarkulee for their winter camp near Meean Meer, to afford more room for the fusiliers; amongst whom we regret to add, that death is almost as busy as ever. The comparative comfort of a barrack will, it is to be hoped, assist, as well as the weather, which is now most favourable, in eradicating the disease that has taken such a fearful hold on the regiment."

A communication from Peshawur, dated 3rd December, thus describes the sanitary state of our frontier post:—

"The Europeans are, I am sorry to say, still suffering much, and the mortality amongst them continues great. The whole force cannot be said to be fit for much, and is in fact only effective on paper. The 71st N.I. returned to Peshawur on the 28th November, and officers and men seemed glad of the move, as the rain must have made it bitterly cold in camp. The sickness is certainly abating with them; the change to Chumkunge stayed the numerous admissions into the hospital, and prevented as many deaths as might have occurred in cantonments, as our corps has incurred nearly double their loss."

The Dekli Gazette, December 8th, states that the sickness was not at all on the decline at that station; that "parades are in abeyance, two and three hundred men of each regiment continue in hospital, and those out wear an emaciated appearance, and draw one leg after the other with strength just sufficient to be returned convalescent."

The views of the local authorities, regarding the measures necessary for the improvement of the sanitary condition of the neighbourhood of Lahore, have met with the sanction of the Governor-General, who has authorized the necessary establishment. With regard to the military arrangements at Lahore, nothing has yet been finally determined upon. It is believed that the whole of the artillery and native troops are to leave Anarkulee and the town for Meeran Meer, and it depends on the decision of the Governor-General as to the location of H. M.'s 96th when they arrive, whether Anarkulee is to be completely abandoned or not. If that corps is to be placed in the citadel, Anarkulee will be condemned as a military station, leaving only the civil officers in that locality.

Sir William Gomm arrived at Calcutta on the 6th December, and was immediately sworn in as Commander-in-Chief and Member of Council.

Sir C. Napier was at Loodiana on the 30th November; he was said to propose being at Ferozepore, the last station in the Bengal Presidency, on the Sutlej, about the time the official information of the arrival of his successor might be looked for, so that he should be enabled to leave the Bengal Presidency the moment he quitted command. The tidings would reach him about the 16th December, so that it would require haste to reach Bombay in time for the steamer of the 3rd January. A list of the courts-martial held during Sir C. Napier's administration, on European officers and soldiers, is published, showing that in eighteen months forty-five officers belonging to the Bengal Army have been brought to trial; fifteen of whom have been cashiered, six dismissed, seven lost rank, five suspended, two have been honourably acquitted, and one acquitted. Of the soldiers, seven have been acquitted, and sixty-nine sentenced to punishment: of these, three have been hanged, and thirteen transported; the rest visited with various degrees of punishment, mainly flogging and imprisonment.

The presidential intelligence is entirely devoid of interest.

From Ceylon we learn that the awkward position in which Sir George Anderson was placed by proceeding thither before the receipt of his commission, and which obliged him to occupy Queen's House as a private individual, was put an end to by the arrival of his commission by the Overland Mail of the 24th of October, which reached Point de Galle on the 26th of November. He was accordingly sworn in with the usual formalities on the 27th, and on the 2nd December held a full-dress levee, which was very numerously attended. "Sir George Anderson," says the Observer, "commences his administration under most auspicious circumstances, both from the prestige of his name, and the condition—political, social, and financial—of the colony."

Colombo had been electrified by an intimation that a change of the seat of Government to Kandy was seriously spoken of.

The China papers contain no news of moment beyond the facts that the insurgents in the Kwang-tung province had gained a victory over the imperialists, having decoyed a detachment into a defile in the hills between Tsingyuen and Yingteh, and cut the entire body of 200 to pieces; and that the insurgents seem, subsequently, to be retiring, or acting on the defensive.

The Friend of China considers the rebellion to be subsiding.

BENGAL.

THE BAREE DOAB CANAL.

The Baree Doab Canal works are on the eve of being commenced. This canal will leave the Ravee some miles below the fort of Shahpore, and follow the line of the highest land between that river and the Beas. At the village of Tubrae, eight miles below Deenanugur, it will throw off a large branch, intended to supply two channels, one of which will terminate in the Sutlej near Sobraon, and the other in the same river in the vicinity of Kusoor. The main canal will pass west of the town of Batala, nearly parallel with the present Huslee Canal; by means of a secondary channel the neighbourhood of Lahore will be watered, as also the country as far as thirty miles below this city, the principal stream continuing its course, along the high land of the Doab, till it reaches a spot within sixty miles of Mooltan, where it will also fall into the Ravee. Three large masonry dams will be required, the first to turn the waters of the Ravee into the canal, and the other two to prevent its escape into the torrent beds of the Tina and Chukee. Masonry falls, with the requisite locks, will regulate the slope of the canal in the upper parts of the line, where the country descends rapidly, while the entrances to the main line, and the several branches, will be secured by regulating bridges. The stream will be available for navigation as well as for irrigation.

Supposing that 2,500 cubic feet of water will be available for irrigation, and adopting Col. Cautley's computation for the Ganges Canal, that one cubic foot of water per second will irrigate 350 beegahs, or 218 English acres, it will be found that 2,500 cubic feet of water, at the rate of Rs. 2. 6 a. 10 pie per acre, will yield a return of, say—

Water mills	40,000	0	0
Transit duties with sale of canal produce	30,000	0	0

or a total of Co.'s Rs. 13,97,311 0 0

From this will have to be deducted annual expenses of establishment and repairs, about 1,90,000, leaving a balance in favour of Government of Rs. 12,07,311 0 0, or say twenty-four per cent. on the estimated outlay, an anticipation by no means extravagant, seeing that such is the return on the water rent, &c. of existing canals. The various designs and estimates connected with this magnificent work have been prepared by Lieut. Dyas, of the Bengal Engineers, and his assistants. It is calculated that, with a sufficient staff and an efficient establishment, the entire work may be completed in four years, if funds are available. Five years may certainly be fixed as the maximum period required to open the canal.

The Governor General, as our readers are already aware, visited the ground at the head of the proposed canal, and is, we are credibly informed, highly favourable to the plan. All the papers connected with the undertaking will go before the Court of Directors for formal sanction, but we are happy to learn this will create no delay, the home authorities having already agreed to the general principles of the undertaking, so that the Government feel themselves authorized to allow the work to be commenced upon immediately, in anticipation of an official reply.—Lahore Chron. Nov. 30.

ARRIVAL OF SIR W. GOMM.

ALTHOUGH the steamer's arrival had been notified the day before, although the three signal guns announced its approach in the early morning of yesterday, nothing was prepared for Sir W. Gomm's reception. The troops in full dress stood ready in their barracks, the officers in their quarters, but, as usual, matters were badly managed, and the great commander-in-chief slipped quietly into the city of palaces, almost unannounced. Colonel Warren, with his usual promptitude, seized the first steamer he could lay his hands on, and hurried off at early dawn to lay his duty at the feet of the "coming man;" but in the anxiety to make a speedy salam, the necessity of preparing for Sir W. Gomm's reception was forgotten, and thus the troops, in accordance to previous orders, got ready, and remained so, whilst the man they would have delighted to honour ran up to Government House like any private individual; but alas! the mischances did not terminate there. Eager to be installed in office, the general was demanding to be sworn in, and the artillerymen stood match in hand preparing to salute him, when a secretary requested his Excellency's commission. Pockets were searched, despatch boxes rummaged, but with no effect, the parchment was not forthcoming; and wanting it, the Commander-in-Chief was plain Sir W. Gomm, nothing more. Off then hurried the Hon. Captain Douglas to the steamer (the Haddington), some three miles distance, and, after strict search, discovered the missing document; which being read at two o'clock, rendered General Sir William Gomm, K.C.B., Commander-in-Chief of H.M.'s and the H.C.'s forces in the East Indies, and reduced Sir Charles Napier to the rank of a passenger to England.—Englishman, Dec. 7.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE JUBBULTPORE SCHOOL OF INDUSTRY is so thriving, that the pupils, 800 in number, are obliged to work till ten o'clock at night to complete their orders; this they do most cheerfully. They are all Thugs, or the children of Thugs, and the hands which now ply the shuttle, or the axe, or the saw, have through the greater portion of their lives been familiar only with the poison cup or strangling rope.

MAULMAIN.—On the 23rd November, the town of Maulmain was nearly blown up by the explosion of two hundred casks of gunpowder, which accidentally caught fire.

CAPTAIN IMPEY.—Extract of a letter from Maulmain.—"The intelligence which has reached us of Captain Impey is not of the most positive nature. He is at one time said to be marching at the head of 20,000 Burmans to the attack of the Shans; at another time he is reported to be at Ava tendering his allegiance to that court and government, and the latest account is that that unfortunate and misguided man is 'lying sick at Kherannee, at Papoo's village, having neither joined the Shans nor the Burmans.' I have reason to believe that this latter is the correct statement. His friend Mr. Tracey some time ago applied to Government for the grant of a forest on the east bank of the Thoung-yeen, and pending the boon, both himself and Capt. Impey are lying upon their oars. As soon as the sanction is obtained, both intend to set vigorously to work in the timber trade, so that all the reports of his heading an army, and all that sort of stuff, is sheer downright nonsense."—Englishman.

THE RAILWAY has, it appears, been brought to a stand for the present from the opposition offered by a wealthy landholder (Goopee Kistna Gossain, of Serampore) to the invasion of his grounds without legal authority. Great blame attaches somewhere for the delay which has occurred in providing such authority. A commissioner has been appointed for obtaining and making over the land required, but he cannot interfere till empowered by a legislative enactment, and the necessary Act, which ought to have been law months since, and was some time ago promulgated in draft, has not yet been passed. There have been great complaints of the harsh and summary proceedings of the "railway pioneers" to the poor people along the line, who found their houses pulled down about their ears without a moment's notice.—Hurkaru, Dec. 7.

THE 3RD REGT. OF PUNJAB IRREGULAR CAVALRY, commanded by Capt. Prendergast, raised at Lahore in 1849, and now stationed at Umritser, will shortly proceed either to Leia or to Mitunkot. The move will throw the whole of the ten regiments of the Punjab Irregular Force across the Jhelum, and when the 4th Punjab Infantry reach their destination, which may be Kohat or Bunoo, there will be only two, perhaps only one of the corps on this side of the Indus.—Lahore Chron., Nov. 27.

ACTIONS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT.—An Afghan, named Sumoondur Khan, has filed a suit against Government for a large sum, for supplies furnished by him when the army was in Kabul, and it is understood that other persons in these parts are about to follow his example.—Ibid.

THE LONDON MAIL of Oct. 24 arrived at Calcutta on Dec. 6.

THE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.—The Calcutta Morning Chronicle mentions, that the underground Electric Telegraph from Calcutta is advancing at the rate of three miles a day, and that messages have already been sent a distance of ten miles. Dr. O'Shaughnessy, the superintendent, throws his whole heart into the work, and will have the credit of constructing the first electric telegraph in India.

BALLOON ASCENT.—We mentioned in our last that a Mr. Kight had treated Calcutta to the novel spectacle of a balloon ascent. He tried it again, but not so successfully. Just after he had passed over the town, and when at the height of above a mile, the balloon burst from the expansion of the gas. A sudden collapse and rapid descent were the consequences, and the aeronaut, much stunned but still alive, was picked up a few miles from Dum-Dum.

JUGGERNAUT.—The East-India Company has, it is said, determined entirely to disconnect itself from the idol worship of Juggernaut, if it can do so without positive breach of faith. It has sent out instructions for the local government to ascertain if it is bound by any engagement to continue its annual grant to the custodians of the temple; and if not, as it is believed is the case, the allowance will be discontinued. The Rajah of Kurdah, in charge of the temple, has sent his mookteer to Calcutta to protest against the measure.—Hurkaru.

MR. PURDON, the Geological Surveyor of the Salt Hills, who has been joined by his assistant, Mr. Theobald, from Calcutta, and who will, in all probability, have Dr. Fleming for a coadjutor, proceeds immediately to enter on the important duties committed to his charge. We entertain sanguine hopes that Mr. Purdon will be found well "up" to his work, and that he is fully capable of solving the interesting problem about to be submitted to him, whether the Salt Hills do, or do not, contain material deserving the attention of Government in a mineralogical point of view. We shall be pleased to learn that the anticipations entertained on the subject are well founded. Under any circumstances, it becomes the Government to ascertain the real nature of the mineral and metallic products of the country.—Ibid, Dec. 7.

THE 14TH LIGHT DRAGOONS.—We hinted, some time ago, at the possibility of H.M.'s 14th Light Dragoons leaving Lahore. There is now every probability of the recommendation of the military authorities being carried out, and of the corps moving hence to Meerut in a very short time.—Ibid.

SOME SIKHS were yesterday admitted into the ranks of the 65th Regt. N. I., having previously agreed to submit to their beards being taken off, as a condition of their entering a regiment of the line. We hope soon to hear of many following the example thus set them.—Lahore Chron., Dec. 7.

THE REV. GEORGE MARRIOTT, D.D., Chaplain of Allahabad, it seems, maintained a correspondence for some time with the Rajah of Banda, not upon matters affecting his soul's health, and the latter, being ill-pleased with certain passages in the letters, called in the aid of the collector, who sent the papers to the Lieutenant-Governor. His honour, either doubting his jurisdiction, or thinking the question unusually weighty, referred the matter to Lord Dalhousie, who sent back the case with his compliments, not feeling himself called upon to decide upon it, and declined to interfere whilst the immediate superiors of Dr. MARRIOTT were at hand. The Lieutenant-Governor then handed the case over to the Bishop of Calcutta, with whom it rests to pronounce an opinion and originate further proceedings. Mr. Thomason cannot suspend the reverend gentleman from the performance of sacerdotal functions, but he has done all that a layman in authority can do under such circumstances. He has prohibited him from leaving his station, preferring that Banda and other places within the district should go without spiritual consolation, rather than receive it from Dr. Marriott. The public will naturally desire to know what the correspondence was all about, but we can only venture to tell them, that it referred to money and a carriage;—heathen superfluities which the chaplain wished to obtain, and was disappointed of. In one of the epistles, he tells the rajah, that if he will comply with certain requests therein contained, he will not only feel continually grateful in this life, but will stipulate that his bones shall pray for him eternally. This clause has been dwelt upon by the government in their correspondence with Dr. Marriott, as being of a very objectionable character, but the chaplain, in his reply, facetiously demonstrates that it is a mere figure of speech. It is well known, he says, both to rajahs and Christians, that "bones have no soul," and hence no unorthodox meaning could possibly be attached to his promise. He also convicts his accusers of inconsistency, in calling a "buggy" a "carriage."—Delhi Gazette, Dec. 8.

THE INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION.—The third consignment of Indian manufactures for the exhibition was opened out for the inspection of the public yesterday, and consisted of the celebrated Dacca muslins and shawls and scarfs, silver ornaments from Cuttack, tussers and baftas from Dacca, gold embroideries from Joudhpore, gold ornaments and costly jewellery from the Rajpootana States, and a collection of weapons and armour from Dholepore. The Dacca manufactures were particularly attractive, and the assortment comprises almost every variety of muslins and scarfs, from coarser stuffs to the famous pieces, which pass through the smallest ring. The Cuttack silver ornaments seem to us to be particularly adapted for the real object of the exhibition, as they will afford an undeniable proof, that the finest filagree work can be executed in India at an astonishingly cheap price—labour actually costing next to nothing. The jewellery from the Rajpootana States, which we understand to be valued at half a lakh of rupees, is not the thing which, in our opinion, will in any way promote the objects of the exhibition; but we are inclined to believe that it has been presented by some native princes, and in that case the Company cannot in courtesy refuse their being displayed in London; the Directors probably thinking that you must not look into the mouth of a gift horse.—Englishman Nov. 20.

JOTEPERSAUD—Mr. Lang and Mr. Hedger have reached Agra to conduct the defence of Lalla Jotepersaud. When Mr. Lang appeared on his behalf before the magistrate at Agra, he was ordered to speak in Hindostanee, of which language he is ignorant. The Delhi Gazette informs us that Jotepersaud did not arrive in Agra in time to save his recognizances, so that he loses nearly Rs. 40,000. He has since arrived.

INEBRIETY AMONGST NATIVES.—We observe in this day's Exchange Gazette, and we record it as indicative of a singular change in native public opinion, that M. Castillon, importer of cognac and champagne, has found it worth his while to have his advertisements translated into Bengalee. There must have been a great consumption of such liquors on the part of Young Bengal, before such a step could have appeared advisable, and we fear that a habit of drinking must have made great progress of late among the wealthy classes of the native community.—Friend of India, Nov. 23.

NATIVE EDUCATION.

We wish it were within our power to say, that a great and crying want of this presidency had any prospect of satisfaction. We refer to the supply of the educational necessities of the interior by the institution of the provincial schools. The advent of Sir Henry Pottinger to the Government of Madras was long looked forward to as the happy epoch from which would have to be dated a more enlarged, liberal, and efficient provision of the means of intellectual improvement to the millions of southern India now sitting in the shadow of debasing ignorance. Painful is the task of recording how flatly falsified have been all our auspicious auguries of the increased spread of mental and moral enlightenment. The end of the third year of the anticipated Augustan rule has arrived, and the eyes of these who are perishing for the lack of knowledge have grown weary with looking for deliverance. That we are not overstraining the case will be evident from the fact of the presentation of a petition by the inhabitants of three villages not far from Madras, to the agents of one of the missionary societies here, praying them to open a school in their neighbourhood, for the instruction of 700 youths, growing up in privation of all the means of useful education. This is not a singular case. The desire for a superior education to that their own imperfect and ill-managed vernacular schools can afford, has a wide spread among the natives of this presidency; and the number of towns, to say nothing of the villages, where the introduction of good schools would be hailed with rapture, must be estimated not by dozens or scores, but by hundreds; yet the accumulated arrears of ten years, now amounting to about two lacs and a half, enjoy unbroken repose in the barren solitude of the treasury cash chest.—Athenæum, Dec. 13.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE NEW SMALL CAUSE COURT, after the death of hopes long enough deferred to make the heart of any reasonable man sick, was opened with ceremonies of appropriate modesty on the 6th. The judges are Messrs. Burgass, Fullerton, and Rose; the two latter commissioners of the old Court of Requests, the former an able member of the Madras bar, who has been substituted for Mr. E. F. Elliot, heretofore chief commissioner, in conformity with that provision of the Act instituting the new Court which requires the principal judge to be a barrister. The salaries on which these functionaries have been appointed are, Rs. 1,500 per mensem for the first judge, and Rs. 1,000 each for the second and third. The services of Mr. Elliot have been justly and suitably acknowledged in continuing to him, though unavoidably superseded, his former emoluments, as well as in a handsome complimentary notice of his valuable abilities, with an expression of regret that the constitution of the New Court has prevented the government from continuing to avail itself of his able services. Mr. G. E. Cower, the deputy sheriff, has also been nominated chief clerk of the New Court, which now fairly set in motion will realize, we hope, the sanguine expectations of advantage its prospective establishment has given rise to.—Athenæum, Dec. 13.

THE EXHIBITION.—We have been highly gratified by an inspection of the splendid and curious articles of ornamental furniture prepared by M. Deschamps for the Industrial Exhibition in London, and now to be seen in his rooms, Mount-road. These articles are the productions of native workmen, and display the greatest skill and delicacy in the execution of the rich and varied ornamental work with which they are covered. The principal article is a grand flower stand, about six feet high, gorgeously and elaborately covered with representations of the beautiful fruits and flowers of India, intermingled with figures displaying a degree of expression perfectly admirable, as well as surprising. This is the more wonderful, as the artists have been obliged, in the representation of the figures, to work after the models which European taste demands, and not after any of the sculptured representations of gods or mortals familiar to the sight of the natives of the East.—Ibid. Nov. 16.

CIVIL FUND.—The following gentlemen have accepted annuities from the Civil Fund, viz.:—Messrs. Thomas Ebenezer John Boileau, George Bird, Arthur Freese, and Abel Mellor.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

MADRAS COURT OF SMALL CAUSES.

Fort St. George, Nov. 19, 1850.—The Right Hon. the Governor in Council has been pleased to make the following appointments:—R. Burgass, Esq. to be First Judge, J. Y. Fullerton, Esq. to be Second Judge, W. H. Rose, Esq. to be Third Judge, of the Madras Court of Small Causes to be established under the provisions of Act IX. of 1850, from the 6th proximo.

In publishing for general information the proclamation required by Act IX. of 1850, for the institution of the Madras Court of Small Causes, and the appointments consequent on its establishment, the Right Hon. the Governor in Council desires to record his high sense of the energy and ability with which Mr. E. F. Elliot has so long presided as First Commissioner of the present Court for the Recovery of Small Debts, and to express his regret that the arrangements rendered necessary by the constitution of the New Court have prevented him from continuing to avail himself of Mr. Elliot's valuable services.

REGIMENTAL MESSES.

Head Quarters, Camp Kurnool, Nov. 22, 1850.—It having been brought to notice that certain regiments of this army are in the habit of ordering from England articles of military equipment, saddlery, &c., in the name of the regimental mess, the cost of the same being considered a mess debt and charged in its accounts, the Commander-in-Chief directs that the practice be forthwith discontinued.

Whenever articles of equipment, as above, may be ordered from England, it must be on the individual or collective responsibility of those immediately concerned; but the cost of such articles is on no account to be debited to the regimental mess, or entered in its accounts. None but those who may voluntarily be parties to such transactions being held directly or indirectly responsible for any loss arising from non-recovery of debts thus incurred.

Reviewing generals are strictly to examine the mess accounts of regiments at their ensuing inspections, and satisfy themselves that this order has been fully carried out, noticing the circumstance in their reports.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL of November 7th arrived at Bombay on December 9th, per Achar.

Commander the Hon. Byron Cary, R.N., has been appointed private secretary to the Governor of Bombay, v. Lieutenant Henry, resigned. Lieutenant Henry has been appointed an aide-de-camp on the personal staff of the Governor of Bombay.

PRESS DISPUTES.—The editor of the Bombay Telegraph some time ago charged the editor of the Bombay Times (Dr. Buist) with having written a letter in the Telegraph abusing Mr. Canon, the editor of the Bombay Gazette. The editor of the Times prosecuted the Telegraph for the assertion. The editor of the latter refusing to give evidence lest he should in some way implicate himself, the case broke down.

SIR J. JEZEKHOV has, it is said, in contemplation the erection and endowment of a Foundling Hospital at his own charge. The munificent knight lately contributed £1,500 to the establishment of an obstetric institution in the vicinage of the hospital which bears his name.

THE GUICOWAR of Baroda has appointed a Resident at Bombay, deeming that by this means his intercourse with Government may be more satisfactorily managed than heretofore.

THE KOJAHs.—Four of the Kojahs (a sect of Mahomedans), convicted of assaulting and killing three men of a division of their own caste at Mahim on the 15th November, were sentenced to death.

THE EXHIBITION.—A beautiful set of models of the agricultural implements of the southern Mahratta country has been sent by Mr. Reeves, collector of Belgaum, for the Great Exhibition of 1851.

THE RAILWAY.—The embankment at Sion Marsh in the Bombay line is being proceeded with; the contracts for the rest of the line have not as yet been closed. When the London Board of Directors next advert to the conduct of the press of India, it would perhaps be as well that they first deal with what we have said, before imputing to us, as is their wont, what we have never dreamt of. We should, for example, have liked to have had some explanation of the grounds on which a guarantee on an unlimited expenditure was looked on as secure, and of the reasons why 86lb. rails were sent out when the London consulting and local managing engineer, and the Bombay Board, were universally opposed to them. We are hostile to railway extravagance and railway jobs—those who share in, countenance, or benefit by, these, accuse us as hostile to railways. We at the same time allow that, seeing that railways are now to be constructed from the pockets of the ryots, for to this the guarantee question amounts, we should have liked to have seen the interests of these parties consulted. 2,000 miles of first-rate road, yielding ten per cent. at least, might have been made from the price of 120 miles of railway, which the public do not expect to yield five per cent.: an unlimited sum might be invested in irrigation, yielding a return of fifteen per cent. We wished the more advantageous adventure to be commenced with: since this has not been done, we have been glad to put up with the alternative, urged the construction of railways, and only exposed jobbery, extravagance, and delusion.—Bombay Times, Dec. 17.

THE N. W. BANK.—A report on the state of the affairs of the Meerut Bank has just been published. Major Angelo's misconduct seems to have consisted not in applying money to his own use, but in so cooking the books as to make sums appear as profits, which were in fact not realized. A considerable part of the stock of the bank consisted, it seems, of money borrowed from it on the security of its own script: nine per cent. was paid as interest for this, while six per cent. was all that professed to be obtainable for dividends. Strange as it may appear, it is a common practice in all parts of India to borrow at the exorbitant rates of brokerage to invest in speculations which have the least possible chance of ever returning profits equal to the interest on the borrowed capital.—Bombay Times, Dec. 17.

CEYLON.

Mr. McCarthy, as Lieutenant-Governor, met the Legislative Council on the 21st of November. In his opening address, he described the state of the revenue as most favourable; but a public writer has questioned his figures, and otherwise accused Mr. McCarthy as Lieutenant-Governor, of doing that which as Auditor-General he formerly condemned in others—viz. putting down Government promissory notes as assets. Be that as it may, a surplus revenue of £10,663 appears on the first half of the present year, and a balance of £62,589 in favour of the colony on the 1st October last, being an increase of £26,000 since the 1st January last. The Lieutenant Governor also announced to the council the intention to bring in an Ordinance for the prevention of cattle stealing, and by which it was designed to place this crime within the jurisdiction of the District Courts, for the purpose of insuring speedy and summary punishment. It is necessary to explain that the crime of cattle-stealing has hitherto fallen within the province of the Supreme Court, where the accused were tried by a jury; whilst in the District Courts the judge alone (with three assessors, whose opinion he is not in any way bound by) will in future be authorised to try them. This extraordinary measure, which is to a certain extent a suspension of trial by jury, it was explained, was rendered absolutely necessary by the state of disorganization into which the districts of Matelle, Kornegalle, and Nuerakalawa are lapsing in consequence of the prevalence of the crime of cattle-stealing. It is remarkable, that these are the very districts where the so-called rebellion broke out in 1848, and where the poor people, so long neglected by Government, were goaded on by bad measures, and oppressive and obnoxious taxes, and finally so fearfully punished.—Observer, Dec. 13.

THE LONDON MAIL of Sept. 24 arrived at Hong-Kong on Nov. 11, per Pekin.

The H.C. Steamer Phlegethon, with Admiral Austen and family on board, got on the rocks below Canton on the 4th November, whereby three holes were made in her iron hull, and the vessel settling in an alarming manner, with the tide running like a sluice, the Admiral and the Misses Austen were obliged to retreat to the boats.

The old questions of Land tenure, and Police assessment, have both passed under review during the current month; and in addition to these standing topics, we have now another,—the Currency question. Agitation of the first of these matters arose out of an objection, on the part of one of our oldest residents, to pay rents for lands, which he had either redeemed from the sea, or that he deemed to be arbitrarily assessed.—Friend of China, Nov. 28.

AUSTRALASIA.

A despatch from Earl Grey to Sir C. Fitzroy, Governor of New South Wales (published in the Sydney papers), after referring to former despatches, instructing the Governor to make immediate arrangements, in concert with the officer commanding the troops in New South Wales, for sending the whole of the disposable force serving there to Wellington, being of opinion that, in the present circumstances of the colony, there was no occasion for so large a body of troops; and further instructing the Governor to inform the Legislative Council that her Majesty's Ministers were of opinion that these colonies had made so much progress in wealth and population that their inhabitants might reasonably be expected to bear also a part of the heavy charges which, with a view to their protection, are imposed upon their fellow-subjects residing in the United Kingdom; proceeds as follows:—

"These communications will have fully prepared you for the reduction which her Majesty's Government finds it absolutely necessary to make of the military expenditure of the Australian colonies, and I have accordingly to acquaint you that her Majesty's Government propose to transfer to the colony of New South Wales the barracks and all military buildings and lands not immediately required for the preservation of stores, and that the charge of providing, maintaining, and repairing quarters in New South Wales must in future be undertaken by the colony, and that the force to be retained there will be reduced to a guard in the capital of the colony, and in the town of Melbourne, which will be the capital of the proposed province of Victoria. If a greater amount of force is required, the Local Legislature must either make provision for raising a more considerable body of police than is now maintained, or some other description of local force, or else provide for the pay and allowances of an additional number of her Majesty's regular army, in which case there would be no objection to allow additional regiments to serve there.

"In adopting the policy which I am thus called upon to prescribe to you for your future guidance, her Majesty's Government are urged by the consideration that New South Wales already possesses representative institutions; that these will, it cannot be doubted, very speedily be extended to the other Australian colonies, and that all the restrictions heretofore imposed on colonial trade by Imperial legislation have now been removed.

"It is my duty to apprise you, that if the Colonial Legislature should not think proper to make adequate provision for the maintenance of the necessary barracks, in the manner in which the health and comfort of the troops will be as well secured as at present, it will be incumbent on her Majesty's Government to remove them altogether.

"I have only further to acquaint you, that in giving up to the colony the barracks and other buildings, which are to be transferred to it under the present instructions, it must be distinctly understood that her Majesty's Government reserve to themselves the right of resuming possession of them at any future time, if it should in their judgment become necessary to do so. Some nominal rent must, therefore, be reserved, as a recognition of the title of the Crown to the property."

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

At the monthly meeting of the Bombay Geographical Society, on the 21st November, Professor Patton read a paper on the aneroid.

Considerable discussion has of late arisen on the subject of the aneroid barometer, and great uncertainty still exists in reference to its utility. A letter from the eminent instrument-maker, Mr. Adie, read before a late meeting of this Society, has tended very much to increase previously existing doubts of its usefulness in ascertaining high altitudes, for which its portability and cheapness would have made it particularly suitable. It being of great importance, not only to have those doubts set at rest, but also to have some means of testing their correctness, Mr. Patton obtained two aneroids,—one, graduated to 27.5 inches, and one to 23 inches,—and subjected them to the following experiment: In the neck of a flask containing a small quantity of mercury he inserted a small bent tube, and when the flask was inverted, the mercury, of course, stood at the same level in the flask and in the tube. The flask was properly supported on a small retort-stand, and the aneroids were then placed under the receiver of an air-pump, and a few strokes given to the pump. When the air became a little rarified in the receiver, the elastic force of the air in the flask pressed down the mercury, and the degree of exhaustion was measured by the altitude to which the mercury rose in the tube. Therefore, neglecting for the present the diminution of the elastic force of the air in the flask, arising from the increase of volume, and neglecting, also, the change in the temperature under the receiver, the rise of mercury in the tube should be exactly equal to the fall indicated by the aneroid, and vice versa. And this was the case in each of the experiments. The air was first pumped out, and the receiver, not being perfectly air-tight, it re-entered gradually, and readings were taken at the same instant.

After giving the details of the different experiments, Mr. Patton continues:—"From these experiments I felt satisfied that the aneroid No. 2 would not differ from a mercurial barometer by more than one-tenth of an inch, if carried to a height of 6,000 feet. Since these experiments were made, I have had an opportunity of taking it with me to the Mahabuleshwur, and of comparing it with the sympiesometer, and the results show how accurately my anticipations have been fulfilled,—at least, as far as 4,500 feet. When the merits of the aneroid become known, and confidence is placed in its indications, it will probably supersede all other portable instruments for ascertaining the heights of mountains."

"There is good reason for believing," says the Chinese Repository for May last, "that the Chinese had the art of printing books by blocks and types fully six hundred years before it was known in Europe, and though their knowledge does not detract from the merits of the invention of Gutenberg and Fust, still how many precious manuscripts and palimpsests might have been saved from irrecoverable destruction if Europe had had commercial and literary intercourse with China in the days of the Heptarchy and Hejira. Moveable types are still employed by printers, though the common mode of printing by xylography is regarded as cheaper. We have recently made the acquaintance of an enterprising bookseller and printer named Tang, who has devoted much attention to the manufacture of moveable types by casting them in moulds, and has already produced two founts, with which he has printed several works. Mr. Tang is a partner of a bookselling firm in Canton, which has expended upwards of ten thousand dollars on these founts."

"According to his account, the mode of making the type is to carve the character upon a small block of wood of the right size, cutting the strokes clean, and then make an impression of its face in fine clay, into which mould the melted tin is poured. The clay is separated from gritty particles by stirring it up in water, and pouring off that which does not soon settle, afterwards drying it. Four types are cast at once in a frame, and the clayey matrix broken in pieces when they are taken out, to be remade for a second casting by a similar impression of the wooden type. They are afterwards planed to a uniform height. The next page is printed with these tin types, raised to the same height as the English ones, in order to take the impression in the common hand-press; they are only $4\frac{1}{2}$ lines high, partly in order to suit the wooden frame in which they are set up and printed, but chiefly to save the expense of tin."

"The frame in which the types are set up and printed off, is a solid piece of rosewood, planed smooth, with its top guarded on three sides by a ledge, the top of which, just the height of the types, forms the border of the page when printed. The types are then set up in the frame, no composing stick being used, the columns separated by neat brass rules, and the leaf divided by a central column, as in Chinese books. In the specimen here given, the types are not spaced, but in works printed with the other and larger font, the characters are usually separated. Twenty-one columns exactly fill the frame; a moving slide secures the types on the top, and completes the border round the page; the types are not justified, or spaced out in each column to the same length, the page being sufficiently tightened at the sides to prevent the types rising when inked. When the page is proved and corrected, it is printed in the ordinary Chinese way with a brush."

"The number of types which have been cast for these two founts exceeds 150,000, but what variety of characters is included in them we do not know. The principal motive Mr. Tang assigns for embarking in the enterprise was to print two sorts of lottery tickets, with which his townspeople gamble very much; one of them, made from the Hundred Family Names, called Wei Sing Pü; and the other from the Tsien-tsz' Wan, or Milenary Classic. He uses them also for whatever jobs may be required, but has never ventured the publication of a newspaper—or more likely has never thought of employing them for such a purpose."

The number of the Repository has a page printed with the tin types cast by the Chinese in clay, which are remarkably clear and distinct. The Editor states that a coadjutor had, by way of experiment, made a small set of moveable clay types, "and the impressions taken from them are such as to afford ample proof that, with a good material and a little experience, it would be very easy to prepare either types or matrices by this original Chinese method at a much less cost than by the steel punches and copper matrices now in use."

Baron MacGuckin de Slane makes the following apology for Arabian poetry. "Its decline," he says, "can be easily traced down from the accession of the Abbassides to the time of the Aiyubites; for many centuries, the patrons of the belles-lettres were of foreign extraction, and writers who sought their favour were obliged to conform their own judgment to that of persons who were in general unable to appreciate the true beauties of literary compositions. Works which had obtained the patronage of the prince could not fail to fix the attention of other poets, who took them as models which they strove to imitate and to surpass. The opinion held in the schools, that the ancient kasidas (elegies) were master-pieces of art, contributed also to the perversion of good taste; their plan and ideas were servilely copied, and it was by refinement of expression alone that writers could display talent. Verbal quibbles, far-fetched allusions, thoughts borrowed from the old writers, and strained so as to be hardly recognizable,—such were the means by which they strove to attain originality: sense was sacrificed to sound, the most discordant ideas were linked together for the futile advantage of obtaining a recurrence of words having a similar written form, or a similar pronunciation: poets wrote for the ear and the eye, not for the mind, and yet the high estimation in which their productions were held may be judged from the readiness of Ibn Khalikan to quote them. His taste was that of the age in which he lived, and the extracts which he gives enable the reader to form an idea of the Arab mind at the period of the Crusades."

The figurative language of the Moslim poets is often difficult to be understood. Thus, according to the Baron, the narcissus is the eye; the feeble stem of that plant bends languidly under its flower, and thus suggests the languor of the eyes. Pearls signify both tears and teeth; the latter are also sometimes called hailstones, from their whiteness and moisture. The lips are cornelians or rubies; the gums, a pomegranate flower. The dark foliage of the myrtle is synonymous with the black hair of the beloved. Ringlets trace on the cheek or neck the letter haw 3; they are also called scorpions, either from their dark colour, or their agitated movements, and it is remarked by M. de Slane that we are told in the scholia on Thucydides (A, §6) that the word σκορπιος was employed by the ancient Greeks to designate a boy's curls. The eye is a sword: the eyelids are scabbards. The fairness of the complexion is camphor; a mole, or beauty-spot, is musk. A mole is also sometimes compared to an ant, creeping on the cheek towards the honey of the mouth. A handsome face is both a full moon and day; and black hair is night. The waist is a willow branch, or a lance. The water of the face is a metaphor employed to denote self-respect: a poet sells the water of his face when he bestows mercenary praises on a rich patron devoid of every noble quality.

Such are the copious resources of Arabian poets!

M. Fresnel, in the Journal Asiatique for October, with great philological skill and sagacity, has identified the Yemenite prince in whose reign the expedition of the Romans under Ælius

Gallus took place. Strabo calls the prince Ιλασσάρος. This name, M. Fresnel shows, is no other than Alyshrah, which in the Himyaric text would be Alasharh, Elasharh, or Ilasharh; this name, in the Greek mode of transcription, must necessarily be written Αλασσάρε, Ελασσάρε, or Ιλασσάρε, which, with the Greek nominative termination, would be Ιλασσάρος. Shurabil Yaksab Alyshrah was born A.D. 68, only forty-four years before the expedition of Ælius Gallus, who was forced by him to raise the siege of Saba, and to make a disastrous retreat.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

FRIDAY, January 17, 1851.

THE expectation, naturally indulged, from the skill of the negotiator, of the success of Sir James Brooke's commercial embassy to Siam, has been disappointed; his propositions, though moderate and reasonable, have been rejected in a peremptory and insolent manner. The most unpalatable of those propositions, and which probably gave a bad savour to the rest, was that for the abolition of the state monopolies, whereby the king secures to himself large profits, as a merchant, to the grievous prejudice of the foreign as well as the domestic trader. The principles of sound commercial policy, simple and obvious as they are, seem to be too perplexing for the comprehension of these semi-barbarous princes. When a British political agent in one of the states of Western India endeavoured to convince the raja and his ministers that a reduction of the enormous tolls levied upon commodities passing through the territory would increase the revenue, they treated the proposition as repugnant to common sense, and when, upon making the experiment, the revenue was doubled, whilst trade and industry received an extraordinary impulse, their wonder was unbounded.

There is much difficulty in deciding how those petty independent potentates are to be dealt with, whose territories can furnish contributions to the general commerce of the world, in which their subjects are willing to participate, when they are pertinaciously bent upon restraining or embarrassing commercial intercourse with other nations. The interests of all communities are so concerned in the giving scope to such intercourse, that it seems almost preposterous to argue the question as one of obligation.

At the first view it would appear that, in the exceptional case supposed, there is no remedy; that all nations, represented by their rulers, have a right, if they think fit, to reject the advantages which accrue from the interchange of commodities, and that, if they are insensible to argument, and obdurate to solicitation and importunity, they must be left to the consequences of their own obstinacy and folly. But a close consideration of the subject may well suggest a doubt whether such an option can really be allowed to one society, as would entitle it to obstruct the highway of international trade, which tends to the moral and material benefit of the whole human family. The productions of the earth were designed by the Author of the Universe for the common use, and to be the common property of mankind in the gross; and an individual nation cannot be at liberty to hoard its products, if abundant enough for foreign supply, and to exclude other nations from an enjoyment which would not contract its own, without contravening the purposes of the Creator. Writers upon public law lay down the doctrine, that nations which wilfully alienate themselves from the rest of mankind, and pursue a solitary and selfish policy, are not entitled to the protection of that law, or to be included within the pale of civilized people.

In the case before us, the question is not, however, one of non-intercourse. The court of Siam does not, like that of Japan, interdict all foreign trade; but it imposes severe restrictions upon it, and denies reasonable accommodations to foreign traders. This, again, would seem, at first sight, to be a matter entirely within the discretion of the particular state, which, it may be alleged, has a right to prescribe the conditions under which commerce shall be carried on with its subjects. There can be no doubt, however, that this right has limitations; that oppressive and tyrannical regulations, imposed by one state upon the subjects of another resorting to its ports for the purpose of peaceable trade may be a legitimate subject of complaint and remonstrance, and may even justify forcible interference. The case of China,—not an unexceptionable case, it is true,—may be cited; but there have been instances in Europe where, in the catalogue of grievances set forth in a declaration of war, the unjust treatment of the merchants of the war-proclaiming state has found a conspicuous place.

It is as agreeable to the rules of universal equity as to the dictates of common sense, that, if the merchants of one nation are permitted to trade at the ports of another, they are entitled there to justice and to all reasonable facilities for the purposes of their trade; and that, though in matters of mere regulation, the municipal law of that nation is binding upon all foreign traders who visit its ports, arbitrary and onerous exactions, rules which confine their dealings to particular individuals, and anything which checks the fair and free course of traffic, cannot be justified.

If this be a correct view of the question, the state monopolies, and other impediments to trade at the Siamese ports, are matters which, if not redressed upon the respectful complaint of our traders, may be made the subject of remonstrance, and even of direct interference, on the part of our Government. Such an interference, having strong grounds for its justification, if exercised, in the eyes of the world, not for the interests of British commerce alone, would not be at variance with principle or practice, and could lead to no evil consequences.

EUROPEAN communities, vexed with internal squabbles arising from slight differences of opinion regarding articles of their common religious faith, might derive a salutary lesson from the harmony which subsists amongst the people of India, who are discriminated by diversities of creed utterly irreconcilable and antagonistical. Under the rule of Christians, numerically a very small minority, are placed in that country millions of Mahomedans, of opposite sects, and tens of millions of Hindus, who, equally abhorring Islamism and Christianity, are strongly attached to rites which Christians and Mahomedans, though denouncing each other's creed, join in reprobating. These discordant elements rarely, and never but upon compulsion, come into conflict; by a wise system of toleration, British government keeps them in peace and subjection.

Strange incidents, however, sometimes arise, in such a chaos of superstitious notions and observances, which probably disturb the gravity, as much as they tax the judicial patience and impartiality, of the Christian dispensers of the law. A small modicum of beef-tea, secretly mixed with their food, might un-caste a whole family of Hindus, and an entire mosque, with all its worshippers, might be contaminated and defiled by the exhibition of a pork chop. The caste questions which come before the Company's Mofussil Courts are often of the most whimsical character, yet they must be adjudicated with as much caution and solemnity as the great Gorham case. A few years ago, damages were recovered in one of these Courts against a superintendent of a Hindu feast for having caused the loss of the plaintiff's character by omitting to invite him to the said feast, which was a solemn festival of the caste.*

An example of the peculiar action of these religious prejudices in India, and of the jealous care with which any violation of them must be guarded against, is furnished in our last publication.† A Musulman ressalidar in a regiment of native cavalry was brought to trial before a court-martial, for having killed a cow in the lines of his regiment, and thereby insulted the religious prejudices of the Woordee major of his regiment, who was a Hindu. The ressalidar, it appears, had taken the precaution to obtain the permission of his commanding officer (a Christian) to kill the cow, so that he had committed no military offence; yet the court found him guilty, and sentenced him to dismissal,—a sentence which the Commander-in-Chief commuted to suspension for six months. "It would be a hard measure of justice," he observed, "to dismiss a brave officer, who has served with honour for fifty years, because he so far forgot his duty as to join in religious animosity."

Those who think the sentence, thus mitigated, a severe one,—and many will think so,—should recollect that this very act, the slaughter of a cow, at Benares, in 1809, caused a violent tumult, attended with considerable loss of life. The Indian Law Commissioners, in their Penal Code, proposed to affix to this offence,—“the destruction of any object held sacred by any class of persons, with the intention of thereby insulting the religion of any class of persons,”—the penalties of fine and imprisonment; remarking that the principle on which they had framed that chapter of the Code, “Of Offences relating to Religion and Caste,” was one on which it would be desirable that all governments should act, “but from which the British Government in India cannot depart without risking the dissolution of society,” namely, that every man should be suffered to profess his own religion, and that no man should be allowed to insult the religion of another, whether true or false.

The soundness of this doctrine cannot be disputed. Our Government in India must never withdraw the protection they throw around every object which the perverse superstition of their subjects regard as sacred, whether cows, peacocks, or monkeys, a salagram, or the tooth of Buddha.

HER Majesty's Government have determined to withdraw the troops hitherto maintained in the colony of New South Wales at the expense of the mother-country, and to leave the office and charge of protection, in time of peace, to the colonists themselves, who have made so much progress in wealth and population, as Lord Grey tells the Governor, that they might reasonably be expected to bear that charge; in addition to which consideration, New South Wales, he adds, possesses representative institutions, whilst all the restrictions imposed upon the colonial trade by the Imperial Legislature have been removed.

By this important step, the Government carry out the views of the financial reformers at home, and it is justified by arguments very plausible in themselves, and which the colonists, if disposed to resist the measure, will have some difficulty in gainsaying. If a colony has arrived at such a stage of maturity that it can exercise all the functions of self-government, it appears to be superfluous, as well as derogatory, to the colony, for the mother-country to maintain a force for purely colonial purposes, which, as Lord Grey remarks, perform duties more analogous to those of a police corps than of a part of her Majesty's regular army. The colony may be considered, he says, perfectly secure from the attack of any foreign enemy, or hostilities by native tribes, or an attempt to rise on the part of the convicts. All the internal protection needed by the colonists could be rendered by a police force or a militia raised by themselves.

But the validity of the reasons by which this policy,—in due course to be pursued towards all our other colonies when placed in similar circumstances,—affords but slender consolation to those who discern in it consequences fatal to the imperial authority. If our colonies are self-governed and self-defended, deriving no aid from the mother-country, and bound to it by no other political tie than the having at the head of its executive an officer appointed by the Crown, their position is that of virtual independence, the single remaining link being more likely to gall and irritate than to unite and attach. Every acquisition made by the colonists in territory, numbers, wealth, and the other elements of political power, will add fresh stimuli to the desire for entire independence, and furnish the means of attaining it.

These are painful reflections, but they will force themselves upon the mind.

CULTIVATION OF COTTON IN INDIA.

Recent advices continue to confirm former accounts as to the satisfactory progress made in various parts of India in the planting, culture, and cleaning of cotton. It is the more satisfactory to find private letters wearing this encouraging aspect, since a portion of the newspaper press of India seems to be more industriously than creditably employed in casting all sorts of doubt and discouragement upon the experiments, and in endeavouring to make even success itself wear the garb of failure. We have seen some letters recently received from the Dharwar district, dated November last, containing satisfactory accounts of the cotton culture in that district. This year's crop has been planted, and the writers state that the cultivation of New Orleans cotton is fast increasing there. Last year, the extent sown with this seed was 15,000 acres; but, from the best sources of information accessible to the writers, including the reports of the Government native officials, there is reason to believe that the quantity sown this year will be upwards of 30,000 acres, more than double that of last year. In the early part of the present season, we learn, the prospect of the crop was not favourable, owing to the want of moisture; but the late rains were both heavy and of long duration, continuing till late in October; and we are glad to learn that, when these accounts left, the prospect of another good crop was most flattering. It is estimated that the produce of cotton from New Orleans seed within the Dharwar district will probably be about 3,300 candies, of 7 cwt. each; but, as a good deal is also planted in the Mogulee, and in the Madras territory adjoining, the amount forwarded from the Dharwar district in 1852 will perhaps reach 4,000 candies. One letter states that "the cultivation of the New Orleans plant is fast gaining ground; and I doubt not that in a few years it will, to a large extent, take the place of the indigenous plant." We also learn that about 600 bales New Orleans, and 350 bales of native cotton, were being forwarded from Dharwar to Bombay at the date of these advices.

From another source we learn that efforts are now being made to extend the culture of New Orleans cotton in other districts, and that a planter has been appointed to Sattara, another to Surat, and a third to Ahmedabad, the district where a Mr. Goldie, many years since, succeeded in growing Bombay cotton; and where, subsequently, Dr. Burns picked some seed amongst the hedges of what had formerly been Mr. Goldie's plantation; and from these seeds grew some excellent cotton, which was much approved by the Bombay Chamber of Commerce. Indeed, it was the growth of this cotton which subsequently led to Dr. Burns's being employed at Broach.

But it is not of New Orleans seed alone that we have good accounts. A few years since, some Pernambuco seed was distributed in the Madras presidency. One gentleman sowed with this seed a patch in a coffee plantation among the Wynad hills, where the soil is said to be poor and rocky, and unfit for almost any other crop. This cotton was not only not cultivated, but was altogether forgotten, till last year a partner of the gentleman who had sown it was struck with the white appearance of a patch of coffee plantation, and found, to his surprise, the cotton plant in full bearing. On seeing this unexpected result, application was made for more Pernam seed, which was supplied; and there is every reason to expect, that if the soil be poor, the moist climate of the Wynad hills will prove exceedingly favourable to the culture of Pernam cotton. A specimen of this cotton was sent to England, and, having been inspected, it has been valued in Manchester at 7d. to 7½d. It has all the characteristics of wild, uncultured cotton, being harsh and irregular; but there is little doubt that due care in culture and cleaning would make it all that is required for the purposes of manufacture. A large quantity of Pernam seed has been forwarded to Southampton, in readiness for the Indian steamer of the 20th inst.—Manchester Guardian.

MISCELLANEOUS.

COLONEL BENTHAM SANDWICH, C.B., of the 1st regiment of Bombay Light Cavalry (Lancers), who died at Cannes, in France, on the 7th of December last, after a protracted illness, aged 58, entered the Bombay army as a cadet of infantry in 1811, and was posted to the 2nd batt. 5th reg. N.I., with which he was employed in active field service in Kattywar and Cutch during the years 1815, 16, and 17; was posted to the 1st regiment of light cavalry in November, 1818, and was present with that regiment on its various services in the field until the end of 1826. In 1838 he was employed in command of the 1st regiment of light cavalry during the campaign in Scinde and Afghanistan, under the late General Lord Keane, and was at the siege and capture of Ghuznee. In 1839, Colonel S. was nominated a Companion of the Military Order of the Bath, and had the 3rd class Order of the Dooranee Empire conferred on him by the King of Afghanistan for his services in that country. He also received a medal for the capture of Ghuznee. Colonel Sandwich was devoted to the service, was highly esteemed, and is deeply regretted.

THE EAST INDIA DIRECTION.—A vacancy in the Direction of the East India Company has occurred, consequent on the resignation of George Lyall, Esq. M.P. Wednesday, the 29th inst. is the day fixed for the election of a director in his stead.

EAST-INDIA COLLEGE.—The examination of the candidates for admission into the East-India College next term was held at the East-India House on the 2nd, 3rd, and 4th inst., when, of nineteen candidates who were examined, the following seventeen were reported duly qualified, viz., Messrs.

A Chinese moral writer, inculcating discretion in speaking, says: "He who created all things, in forming man, gave him two hands, two ears, and two eyes, and but one tongue, implying that he should see, hear, and do a great deal, but say little. His tongue is closely shut up in his mouth, the teeth being a wall, the lips suburbs, the beard palisades: so that the tongue is, as it were, trebly guarded."

Abingdon Street, Northampton.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

MORE than twenty years have elapsed since you placed me in the honourable office of a Director of the East-India Company.

During that period, many questions deeply involving your interests, the interests of the British nation and those of the people of India, have come under discussion—to all of them I have given my best consideration, and on all I have delivered an honest and unbiassed opinion.

For the rights of my constituents I trust I have been zealously watchful, and for the welfare and happiness of the people of India, I feel that I have ever cherished the deepest regard, and laboured with untiring industry.

Your approbation and continued confidence, as manifested by repeated re-elections, I have felt and valued greatly; and when through your kindness I returned to the Direction in April last, I indulged a hope that renewed health would enable me to discharge the important duties of a Director as heretofore. That hope, however, has not been fully realized, and I therefore think it right to surrender into your hands the trust so kindly conferred, rather than retain it when enfeebled health must necessarily diminish the power of exertion.

In announcing to you this step, I have a parting duty to perform of the most pleasing kind, that of tendering my best wishes for the continued prosperity of India under the administration of the East-India Company, and my warmest thanks for your kind and long-continued support.

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,
Your very faithful servant,
GEORGE LYALL.

Park Crescent, January 15, 1851.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

A Vacancy having occurred in the management of your affairs, by the retirement of your much respected Director, Mr. Lyall, I hasten to apprise you that it is my intention, in fulfilment of my pledge, to proceed to the ballot at the ensuing election.

Deeply thankful for the promises of support which I have received from so numerous a body of the proprietors, as to justify the most confident expectation of success, I respectfully solicit all those who, though kindly disposed to favour my pretensions, have not yet declared themselves, now to honour me with intimation of their purpose.

The day of election is fixed for the 29th instant, and I will lose no time in forwarding to my friends who may desire them, letters of attorney, to enable them to vote by proxy.

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,
Yours very faithfully,
WILLIAM DENT.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

I TAKE the earliest opportunity of intimating that it is not my intention to contest the seat in your Direction, rendered vacant by the retirement of George Lyall, Esq.

At the same time I have the honour to inform you, that from the satisfactory progress of my canvass, I am enabled to pledge myself most positively to go to the ballot upon the next vacancy; and I am happy to add, that, through the kind exertions of my friends, I shall do so with a perfect confidence of success.

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,
Your obliged and faithful servant,
JOHN HARVEY ASTELL.

6, Vigo-street, Regent-street, January 15, 1851.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

A VACANCY having occurred in the East-India Direction, by the retirement of Mr. Lyall, I have the honour to announce to you that, in accordance with the intimation contained in my letter of the 1st of August last, it is my intention to proceed to the ballot, which is fixed for the 29th instant, and I respectfully solicit the votes and support of such proprietors as have not yet declared themselves. My Committee will meet daily at the London Tavern, where the attendance of my friends is earnestly requested.

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,
Your obedient servant,
JOHN CARNAC MORRIS.

Committee Room, London Tavern, January 15, 1851.

P.S. It is particularly requested that any recent change of residence may be notified to the Committee.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

THE resignation of Mr. Lyall having caused a vacancy in the East-India Direction, I beg to say that it is my intention to proceed to the ballot, in accordance with the announcement which I had the honour of making to you in July last.

To those friends who have kindly promised me their support, I desire to return my grateful acknowledgments, and to solicit the continuance of their exertions in my favour.

To those proprietors who have not yet declared themselves, I renew my earnest solicitations for the honour of their votes and interest at the ensuing election, which is fixed for Wednesday, the 29th inst.

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,
Your very faithful and obedient servant,
DUDLEY COULTS MARJORIBANKS.

P.S. Mr. D. C. Marjoribanks' Committee sit daily at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street, and his supporters are respectfully requested to apprise them of any changes in their residences, and of their wishes as to the mode of voting, whether by proxy or in person, that in the former case the necessary papers may be duly forwarded to them.

London Tavern, January 16, 1851.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

I BEG respectfully to announce to you that it is not my intention to present myself to you as a Candidate for a Seat in the Court of Directors, on the occasion of the vacancy created by the retirement of Mr. Lyall. I take this opportunity of returning my best thanks to those proprietors who have honoured me by communicating to me their approval of the grounds upon which I have asked their suffrages, and of soliciting the support of those who have not yet favoured me by such declaration.

The reception which my claims have hitherto met with affords me ample encouragement steadily to continue my canvass, and I trust that, through your kindness, I may find myself at no very distant period in a position to come to the ballot with every prospect of success.

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,
Your most obedient servant,
L. R. REID.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

THE resignation of Mr. Lyall has occasioned a vacancy in the Board of Direction of your affairs.

It would be premature at this early stage of my canvass to advert to the period when I may come to the ballot, but I gladly avail myself of this opportunity to offer you my grateful thanks for the support and encouragement I have already received.

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,
Your obedient servant,
J. N. R. CAMPBELL.

10, Harley-street, Cavendish-square, January 15, 1851.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

A VACANCY having occurred in consequence of the resignation of your esteemed Director, Mr. LYALL, I take the liberty of again presenting myself to your notice.

The considerable accession of votes upon which I may fairly calculate after the ensuing election determines me, notwithstanding the very favourable reception by which I have been hitherto encouraged in my canvass, to postpone, for a short time only, an appeal to the ballot.

In the interval, be assured that I shall spare no exertion to obtain for myself the honourable distinction of a seat in the Court of Directors, to which I look forward with increasing confidence.

I have the honour to be, with great respect,
Your obliged and obedient servant,
FREDERIC MILLETT.

Woodhill, Ripley, Surrey,

COMPLETION OF THE NATIONAL CYCLOPÆDIA OF USEFUL KNOWLEDGE.

On the 1st of February, 1847, the publication of "The National Cyclopædia" was commenced. On the 1st of February, 1851, the Work will be completed, in Forty-eight Parts and Twelve Volumes.

The Proprietor has a real gratification in repeating the original announcement:—"The 'National Cyclopædia' will consist of Twelve Volumes, demy octavo, of more than five hundred pages each. Each Volume will consist of Four Parts, published Monthly, at One Shilling each, the entire number of Parts being Forty-eight. A Volume will be published every four months, strongly bound, for Five Shillings. The time occupied in the publication will be four years."

The Publisher will have fulfilled his undertaking in every particular.

The Completion of the Work will involve a very extensive demand for sets. The Twelve Volumes are stereotyped; but it is not an easy operation to reproduce a book of more than six thousand pages, and impossible to do so, without delay, if previous notice is withheld. The Publisher, therefore, most earnestly requests that persons desirous of becoming purchasers of the complete Cyclopædia, print Three Pounds, in Twelve Volumes, strongly bound in cloth, or Three Pounds Twelve Shillings handsomely half-bound in calf, will intimate their intention to their respective Booksellers immediately.

KIDSTON'S MECHANICAL LEECH.

WM. KIDSTON and Co., 18, Bishopsgate Street Without, London, in directing the attention of the medical profession to their newly-invented instrument, termed "Kidston's Mechanical Leech," think it would be superfluous and presumptuous to make any comment in its behalf, further than drawing their attention to the testimonials in its favour, published in the "Lancet" of September 28, and in the Pharmaceutical Journal for October.

Full instructions for use will accompany the instruments. Price per set of instruments, i.e. three "Leeches," or Vacuum Glasses, with Puncturing Instrument, electro plated, in neat morocco case, complete,—£2. 5s.

TO LATE RESIDENTS IN INDIA.—TRUE MADRAS CURRY, and MULLIGATAWNEY PASTE and CHUTNIES.—Messrs. BARRIE and Co., Vepery, Madras, to enable their old correspondents returning from India to continue the use of the celebrated Condiments, have made arrangements to forward regular supplies of the above, packed in glass jars for family use, at 1s. 9d. and upwards, which may be had of CROSSE and BLACKWELL, Purveyors to Her Majesty, 21, Soho Square; FORTNUM, MASON, and Co., Piccadilly; and of the principal Sauce Vendors throughout the kingdom. Each bottle is labelled, and BARRIE and Co., Madras, stamped on the glass.

BECKWITH and SON, GUN-MAKERS to the Hon. East-India Company, 58, SKINNER STREET, SNOW HILL, LONDON. The excellent shooting of Beckwith's Rifles is established by upwards of fifty years' experience. B. and Son being manufacturers, they are enabled to offer Double-barrel Rifles, suitable for the Colonies, at very low prices, and warranted to shoot well. HINDUSTANI WORKS BY JOHN SHAKESPEAR, Esq.

NEW EDITION, with GREAT ADDITIONS.

This Day is published, the 4th Edition, in 1 vol. 4to. price £5. 5s. in boards, SHAKESPEAR'S HINDUSTANI and ENGLISH DICTIONARY, GREATLY ENLARGED: to which is added, a DICTIONARY, ENGLISH and HINDUSTANI, ENTIRELY NEW.

To the First Part of this Dictionary, the author has, by laborious study of Hindustani works, both printed and manuscript, made the most extensive additions. In the Hindustani and English Part, the Hindustani words are printed in their proper characters, together with the pronunciation in Roman letters. The Derivatives, which are traced from the Sanskrit, Arabic, Hebrew, Persian, and Greek, are given respectively in the character peculiar to each of those languages.

The Second Part, English and Hindustani, is ENTIRELY NEW. It comprises the most common English words, and also numerous usual phrases, with the fittest corresponding translations into Hindustani.

REVIEW IN "TIMES" Jan. 3.—"Much attention has been paid to the collecting of scientific terms, especially botanical ones, as well as to the correct rendering them into the technology of Europe." * * * "The Hindustani and English Part of it now contains upwards of 53,000 words and phrases explained, being 7,000 more than in the last edition, and 11,000 more than in any other Dictionary of the like description now extant." * * * "In India, as well as in Europe, the character of this work has long been fully established, and the present edition will greatly enhance its reputation."

5th Edition, 1 vol. royal 8vo. price 14s.

A GRAMMAR OF THE HINDUSTANI LANGUAGE. To which is added, a short Grammar of the Dakhni.

1 vol. royal 8vo. price £1. 10s.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE HINDUSTANI LANGUAGE. Designed especially for those who have no Instructor.

In 2 vols. 4to. price £1. 12s.

MUNTAKHABAT-I-HINDI; or, SELECTIONS in HINDUSTANI. With a verbal translation and grammatical analysis of some parts, for the use of Students of that language.

HAILEYBURY COLLEGE.—A Married Clergyman, M.A. of Oxford, who has long prepared for the preliminary examination with marked success, will have vacancies after Christmas for pupils above 13 and under 17 years of age. His system of instruction ensures the most rapid progress. The judicious course of study required by the H.E.I.C. of candidates for Haileybury is equally desirable for general students, but in case of such applicants, the recommendation of a Director or Member of Parliament is required.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS, A CERTAIN CURE FOR

DROPSY.—Extract of a letter from Mrs. Leedham, of Leamington, dated Oct. 15, 1850:—"To Professor Holloway. Sir,—It is with gratitude that I write to inform you of the wonderful cure effected on myself by taking your Pills for a severe case of dropsy. The disease appeared about five years since, and, notwithstanding the various remedies I tried, and the different medical men I consulted, all seemed unable to check its progress; at last I was so much swollen that I could scarcely walk. At this crisis I commenced taking your invaluable Pills, and by their means, and strict attention to your printed directions, I am now perfectly cured."

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

CEYLON.—THE COFFEE ESTATE called NILLOO-MALLEY, situate in the Kallebokka Valley, in the Central Province, containing 508 acres, of which 196 acres planted and in full bearing, and 312 reserved forest land. Also, Six Sixteenths of the adjoining Estate, called DEYANELLA, containing 448 acres, of which 206 planted and in full bearing, and 243 reserved forest land. Will be DISPOSED OF BY PUBLIC AUCTION in CEYLON, in MARCH next.

For particulars, apply to Mr. G. H. DUNDAS, on the Estates; or to Mr. CLAUD HAMILTON and Mr. EDWARD HARDING, at Messrs. THACKER and Co., 29, Great St. Helen's.

LADIES' & GENTLEMEN'S DRESSING CASES.—

MECH'1, 4, Leadenhall Street, London.—His STOCK possesses peculiar advantages, both in quality and price. There is a general complaint that the internal fittings of dressing cases are often very inferior. Those who purchase at Mech's will be sure of having every thing of the best, because he has long been celebrated for the superiority of his cutlery, and has bestowed equal pains in bringing to perfection his too-h, nail, hair, and shaving brushes, and other necessities. In fact, he considers it essential that each article in a dressing case should be perfect in itself, so as to render the whole useful and complete. Catalogues gratis. The largest assortment in London of papier mache manufactures, and the usual stock of articles suited for presents. Mech's peculiar steel razors, 7s. and 10s. per pair. His magic strops, 2s. 6d. to 6s. 6d.; paste, 6d. and 1s. per cake. Cutlery ground and repaired daily on the premises.

* * * All articles warranted to stand an Indian climate.

Medical Officer—John Grant, Esq., Apothecary-General.
Bankers—Bank of Bengal.
Solicitors—Messrs. Frith & Sandes.

This Society offers a lower and more economical scale of Premiums for Life Assurance than hitherto demanded by the established Offices in India.

Annual Premium for assuring 1,000 rupees:—

CIVIL.			MILITARY AND NAVAL.
Age.	With Profits.	Without Profits.	Age.	With Profits.	Without Profits.
20	Rs. 33	Rs. 31	20	Rs. 38	Rs. 35
30	38	35	30	44	41
40	49	45	40	53	49
50	63	59	50	66	61
60	82	77	60	84	79

All holders of Policies in India on the Profit scale, who may have paid five annual premiums, will be entitled, at the expiration of the fifth year, to a year's profit, calculated on the average of the preceding five years; such profit to be paid in cash, or to go in diminution of the future premiums payable, or to be added to the sum assured by the policy, at the option of the holder, after the calculation of the profits shall have been made in London.

After the expiration of 1851, the profits will be declared annually, and the payers of five complete annual premiums be regularly entitled to a participation therein, with a like option as to the mode of application.

Parties assured in India for Life shall, on their return to England for a permanency, and on the first half-yearly premium becoming due, be entitled to come upon the English rates of premium, and be placed under the rules and conditions of the Society there obtaining.

All parties assured for Life, or for terms other than for Life, whatever the number of payments, or the permanency or otherwise of their residence in Europe, shall, after completing a full year from the date of their quitting India, and on the first half-yearly premium thereafter becoming due, be entitled to a reduction of their premium to the English rates, such reduced rates being continued during their further residence in Europe.

Notices of Assignments of Policies will be duly registered at the Office of the Secretaries.

The Society also grants ENDOWMENTS and DEFERRED ANNUITIES for India, the Tables for which, with full information, may be had at the Office of the Family Endowment Society, No. 12, Chatham Place; or at the Office of the Secretaries in Calcutta, Messrs. GORDON, STUART, and Co.

SOLICITOR—William Henry Cotterill, Esq.

PHYSICIAN—G. Burrows, M.D., F.R.S., 45, Queen Anne Street, Cavendish Sq.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 9th of May, 1849, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums. This will be found a liberal reduction if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premiums.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year
20	On or before 9th of May, 1844.	£1,000	£19 6 8	£11 2 4

VARICOSE VEINS, WEAKNESS, FRACTURES, SPRAINS, &c.

HUXLEY'S SURGICAL CAOUTCHOUC ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE-CAPS, &c., are now daily patronized by all the leading members of the profession. Their superiority over every other fabric for artificial support is admitted by all who inspect them. They afford an equal, comforting, and permanent pressure on every portion of the limb, and are drawn on with the facility of an ordinary stocking. H. and Co. guarantee a comfort and support hitherto unknown in any other form of bandage. It is well known that all kinds of Surgical Stockings lately used have a tendency to impede the free and healthy action of the muscles, thereby producing relaxation and great diminution of the limb. Only to be obtained at HUXLEY'S Parisian Shirt Warehouse, 5, Vere Street, Cavendish Square.

HORTICULTURAL & AGRICULTURAL SEEDS,

Packed in Tin Cases for India, from

37 & 38, OXFORD STREET, SOUTHAMPTON,

Adjoining RADLEY'S HOTEL, facing the RAILWAY TERMINUS, and in the IMMEDIATE VICINITY OF THE DOCKS.

PAGE and Co. have the pleasure of bringing before the public one of the testimonials out of the many received, from India, relative to the condition in which SEEDS, &c., forwarded by them to that climate, reach their destination, and all orders will have their very best care.

"Gentlemen, — In acknowledging the receipt of your last supply of VEGETABLE and FLOWER Seeds, which reached me on the 8th of June by the Overland Route, I have the honour to inform you that they HAVE ALL turned out so FRESH and GOOD, that the demands on our Society have INCREASED so much, that I must now cancel my former order, and beg of you to supply me according to the list now furnished.

(Signed) "H. J. BARR, Captain,

"And Secretary to the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of Bombay."

"Bombay, July 1st, 1847."

PAGE and Co. have had the pleasure of supplying this Society since the year 1846, and are preparing for the MAIL OF THE 20th INST., when commands will have their best care.

EMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION.

IMMIGRATION being much required in AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, &c., and as the supposed expense of an OUTFIT often prevents individuals emigrating, S. W. SILVER and Co., CLOTHIERS, OUTFITTERS, and CONTRACTORS (having a large interest to maintain in those Colonies), have been advised to make known that they can supply a comfortable OUTFIT, including Bedding, for MALE or FEMALE Emigrants, from Four Pounds (net) upwards, or less (Two Pounds if needful), and for Children in proportion, at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN (opposite the London Tavern), where lists will be given on application.

S. W. S. & Co., being the makers of nearly every article in all the Outfits they supply, and as one of their objects is to promote EMIGRATION, they neither receive from Agents, or pay the too usual commission to any person introducing Passengers to be fitted out, so that the Passage and Outfit may be procured at the least possible expense; but they will, on application, advise Passengers how to obtain the most economic passage to the Colonies. They have a Representative in every Australian Colony, to whom they ship Clothing monthly; thus they would forward small parcels free of expense.

NAVAL and MILITARY OFFICERS, MIDSHIPMEN, CADETS, CIVILIANS, LADIES, &c., are outfitted at the CAHIN-PASSNORR OUTFITTING Warehouse, Nos. 66 and 67, CORNHILL (the Emigration Outfitting being exclusively at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN), LONDON, and each branch at St. GEORGE'S CRESCENT, LIVERPOOL.

EAST-INDIA UNITED SERVICE AGENCY, 53, CHARING CROSS, and 25, SPRING GARDENS.

MAJOR R. D. WHITE (twenty-nine years in the Bengal Army) will be happy to receive gentlemen connected with India and the Colonies, or attend to their written communications.

Passages secured by Sea or overland; Houses or Apartments engaged; Regimental Messes; Wines and Stores; Outfits, &c., supplied; and every description of Agency business transacted.

No charge for subscription to the Agency or Rooms, but every information furnished.

EAST-INDIA ARMY and GENERAL AGENCY, 136, LEADENHALL STREET.

We have taken into partnership Mr. JAMES CUNDY, late of the Madras Army.

In thus having secured the services of a gentleman who, by long residence in India, has gained considerable practical knowledge, we feel that we have best consulted the interests of our old friends, and we hope, show good reason for an accession of new.

On personal application at our office, or on inquiry by letter, every information and assistance will be given to parties arriving from or intending to embark for India, China, and the Colonies, and constituents in England will have prompt attention paid to their wishes, and will find in the Reading-room the latest newspapers, as well as every information they may require on all topics relating to India.

Detailed Estimates of Outfits for Writers, Cadets, and Assistant-Surgeons have been prepared with much care, showing the comparative expense between a journey overland, via Egypt, and a voyage by the long sea route.

Drafts and Letters of Credit on Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, and China, in large or small sums, are also granted at this Agency.

JAMES BARBER and Co.

THE following SPLENDID SHIPS, belonging to Messrs. WIGRAM, of Blackwall, built and fitted expressly for the India Trade, will leave GRAVESEND at the appointed dates, calling at Portsmouth for Passengers.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

AFFAIRS of domestic interest form the staple of the news brought from India by the present mail. The chief incident is the promulgation of a Farewell Order of Sir Charles Napier, which exhibits in a very humiliating point of view the conduct of certain officers of the Indian army, whose debts, he says, "are no less injurious to the fair fame of the military profession, than discreditable to their regiments, and ruinous to themselves." This severe exposure,—not less necessary than severe,—has called forth discordant opinions from the Indian press. The Bombay Times, the harshest critic of the general policy of Sir Charles, bestows the highest praise upon this, "one of the most tremendous lectures ever published,—the more cutting and tremendous in that it is almost all of it true." It adds:—

"It is probably not yet generally known to the European reader, that the personal liabilities of the British officers in India to their various creditors exceed a million sterling; that four-fifths of our subalterns are in debt; and that the civil service is still worse in this way than the military. This woeful state of matters, with all the sad train of deplorable consequences attendant on it, is almost entirely due to habits of selfish or sensual indulgence, and gross personal extravagance, which have for many years past been creeping in amongst us—to horse-racing, and other varieties of gambling: balls and dinners on a scale met with at home only amongst the nobility—the use ad libitum of champagne and other expensive liquors,—with, at the presidency, house-rents and equipages double or triple what can be afforded. That these things are not the result of low pay, is evident from the fact that young civilians, who receive twice or thrice as much as young soldiers, get just so much the more deeply and rapidly entangled, whereas large bodies of non-commissioned officers make money from their pay."

The Lahore Chronicle observes, "If all the orders of his Excellency, and all his acts, had borne the impress of this valedictory address, glorious indeed would have been the command of Sir Charles Napier." On the other hand, the Bombay Telegraph characterizes the Order as "marked by a spirit of acerbity and even of rashness;" observing that Sir Charles "generalizes in such coarse though vague language upon the disgrace and infamy attached to indebtedness, as to render his strictures harmless and without distinct application to the guilty parties;" whilst the Delhi Gazette is of opinion that, were not the Order a privileged communication, "actions for libel might lie against the ex-Commander of the Bengal Army."

Sir Charles was received with a kind greeting at Ferozepore, on the 9th December, the troops being drawn up in line alongside the road for his reception.

"Arrangements were made to distinguish Sir Charles from the numerous parties of horsemen coming in the same direction, who, with elephants, camels, cart and foot passengers, made such a dust, that the first gun, announcing his arrival, had fired before any of the 3,000 men awaiting him had caught a glimpse of his person. No sooner, however, did the veteran catch the sound, than he put spurs to his horse, and dashed, with the whole cavalcade of his staff, down on the troops, like an eagle stooping on his prey. He was met by the presentation of arms, and three cheers, along the whole line. Sir Charles rode leisurely down two-thirds of the line, when, either to save time, or to indulge a natural impatience of inactivity, he started again, and wheeling sharply round the left flank, amidst clouds of dust, in which half his cortège was lost, he dashed along the rear, and round to the front again, and would have put the troops in movement, had the time and ground permitted; but, on consideration, they were dismissed with an expression of his Excellency's approbation of their appearance."

On the 10th, at a dinner given by the 87th Fusiliers, at which upwards of fifty persons sat down, Sir Charles, in reply to a toast, alluded to his having, when quite a boy, been connected with the 87th, and concluded by proposing the health of their colonel, Lord Gough, "than whom," he remarked, "a worthier or a more truly noble-minded man does not breathe." Sir Charles said he had long known Lord Gough more or less, but that lately he had had opportunity to become better acquainted with his real character, and he would repeat, "a more amiable or a more noble-minded man did not exist."

In the reports of what fell from Sir Charles that evening, it is stated that he passed high encomia upon the native army, remarking, that he had often heard comparisons drawn between the officers of the two services,—the Royal and the Company's; but he could find no difference—he had always found the same spirit in both—the officers of the Sepoy Army in the day of action outstripping their men to the front, and the men themselves, the best in the world to support H. M.'s troops; that though he had led into action men from the three presidencies of Bengal, Bombay, and Madras, he had never seen one of them flinch from his duty; that, Ferozepore being the last station in which he would appear as Commander-in-Chief, he was glad of having an opportunity to express, in a Queen's mess, his high esteem of the Indian army; "to have done so at other tables might have seemed flattery; but here he felt more at liberty to speak freely."

Sir Charles embarked on the Sutlej, at Ferozepore, on the 18th December, for Kurrachee, where he would embark on the Moozuffer steam frigate. He was expected at Bombay on the 8th or 10th January, in time to proceed to Europe by the steamer of the 17th.

The Governor-General had left Lahore, on his way to Wuzeerabad, where he was to meet Maharajah Golab Singh on the 24th December. On the 18th he had reached Serokee, six miles only from the place of meeting. The Maharajah arrived at Sealkote, from Jumoo, on the 19th, and was expected to be at Wuzeerabad by the 22nd. He was to wait on the Governor-General on the 24th, and his visit was to be returned on the 26th. On the 27th there was to be a grand review of the British troops; and this was to be followed, on the 28th, by a review of the troops in attendance on the Maharajah.

There had been but little abatement of the sickness at Lahore. It will be seen from details given elsewhere, that the number in hospital had slightly diminished, but the number of deaths had increased. Ninety-five men in the 1st European Fusiliers had died of the disease, and that regiment has altogether lost 139 men during the last ten months. At Peshawur the sickness was decreasing; the number in hospital, which had been upwards of 2,600, is now below 1,400. The mortality here had not been great. Arrangements are being made for improving, as far as possible, the location of the troops; the greater part of the garrison of Lahore are to be moved from Anarkulee to Meer Meer and it is said that Loodianah is to be given up as a military station, on account of its insalubrity, and because it is now no longer a frontier town.

The Punjab police arrangements are tending towards completion. The force is to consist of six battalions; Major N. Chamberlain is to be superintendent. Besides the infantry, there will be a mounted force of about 2,700 men, and three subaltern officers are to be appointed, with the designation of "Lieutenants of Police," who are not, however, to be attached to any specific corps, but to move about as occasion may require.

The only occurrence reported of a political character is an outbreak amongst the tribes on the north-eastern frontier, noticed by the Englishman some time since, and of which that journal gives the following as the latest particulars:—

"About 500 troops, with several officers and the head-quarters of the Assam Light Infantry, are engaged in operations against the Angami Nagas. These people have been a long time engaged in plundering their neighbours, and laying waste all the villages round them, including those of another Naga tribe, which is partly under British authority, and partly independent. It has been nearly exterminated by the Angami tribe. We have heard that these people's incursions were reported so long ago as 1835; and an attempt was made to restrain them in 1839. Since that time scarcely a cold season has passed without a military party being sent into the hills in order to overawe these marauders, and convince them that they are not beyond the strong arm of the British Government. This plan seems to have been effectual, and the villages within British territory were completely protected from plunder and murder till about two years ago. About that time, we know not by whose advice, a native was placed on the hills as a sort of superintendent or darogah. He had a small military force at his disposal. This man had previously lived among the Nagas, though we believe himself of Hindoostan, and he seems to have been selected for his knowledge of the country and firmness of character. A great object in placing him in the hills was to put an end to the blood-feuds, so common among the tribes. In this he did not succeed, whether from partiality in seeking personal advantage, or because the attempt was prematurely made, seems uncertain. Be that as it may, his interference was resisted, and terminated in his being murdered one night, seven or eight sepoy and coolies being killed, and about thirty wounded at the same time. The affairs of the Punjab being then unsettled, Government did not punish this crime at the time; but last year a party was sent to the hills under Lieutenants Campbell and Vincent. They were well received by a clan, being one-half of the inhabitants of Mozomah, a large village where the Darogah was killed; the other half-clan under their chief retired, and took up a strong position on a neighbouring height.

"Shortly after this, Lieut. Vincent proceeded south to meet the political agent from Munipore, as had been previously arranged; but by some misunderstanding, when Lieut. Vincent arrived at the place appointed, the political agent was found to have started on his return the day before. Lieut. Vincent fell sick, and was obliged to leave the hills. On his way down he met Lieut. Campbell with all his party in retreat. He had previously gone out to enforce the obedience of a large neighbouring village allied to the hostile party of Mozomah. The enemy were on the watch, and the detachment left by Lieut. Campbell not wide awake, for the village of Mozomah was burnt down in the night, and he lost all his supplies in the fire; so that it became necessary, for the safety of his party, to retire at once to the depôts at Dhemapore below the hills. The unfortunate people who had favoured the British force, stated to be about three hundred, including women and children, were obliged to accompany him for protection, abandoning all their cattle and whatever property they had saved from the fire. At Dhemapore these officers met Capt. Butler, who had come over from Nowgong to see what was going on, and he thought it proper to return to Nowgong immediately. Some of the villagers proceeded to Gowhatty, to beg the government agent to do something towards restoring them their village. Lieut. Vincent, though still very ill, volunteered to return with a party to retake the village, and to protect it with a small detachment, that this friendly tribe might be enabled to cultivate their fields in security. It was late in the season, viz. February, and the party was overtaken by heavy rain, but nevertheless re-occupied the village, and Lieut. Vincent volunteered to remain there through the rains, which offer was accepted. He has remained there all the year, until the commencement of the dry season permitted a re-inforcement to be sent to him. The friendly tribe being supported by others, was enabled to supply itself and the detachment with grain through the rains.

"When the hostile clan retired to the heights, they erected a stockade on a ridge very difficult of access, and having obtained some muskets, which appear to have been recently introduced among the Munniporees and Cacharees, they were enabled to maintain their defences against the parties sent to attack them by Lieut. Campbell. These defences, we hear, have since been greatly strengthened, for it was not considered prudent to permit the small force under Lieut. Vincent to undertake offensive operations, but to wait quietly for guns. We heard some time ago that these had been sent up, under Capt. Reid, of the Artillery. Indeed, it was reported that a large force of infantry was about to proceed to the North-eastern frontier, but the rumour was either unfounded or the intention abandoned.

"The principal object of the present campaign is to capture the defences above mentioned, and it is expected that when the Nagas find their fortifications untenable, they will break up their party and come to terms, the chief having already shown signs of being very tired of the war. A reinforcement has been sent up, and it is supposed to be the determination of Government to use the opportunity of putting an end to the predatory incursions of the Nagas. If they are not effectually put down at once, the task will be far more formidable when they become, as they assuredly will, possessed of a sufficient stock of fire-arms. The country is extremely difficult, covered with thick forests, and full of abrupt declivities, so that troops could hardly penetrate against resolute defenders thoroughly acquainted with the country. Should these people be completely subdued, it will be necessary to appoint officers to manage the country, or else in a few years they will assuredly return to their predatory habits."

The journalist describes these men as a fine, bold, active people, fond of traffic and barter, and desirous of making money. Their number is estimated at 100,000. It is added that General Whish was about to proceed to Assam on a tour of inspection, and that it will depend on his report whether or not more troops will be ordered to that quarter.

The other troublesome eastern frontier tribes, the Kookers, were at last disposed to be quiet, and five of their chiefs had offered to submit, and to give hostages for keeping the peace towards the inhabitants of the British territories.

Nothing certain is known respecting the course the Government of India will take towards recovering from the Nizam the large sum of money due by him to the East-India Company's Treasury. The Bombay Telegraph states that an affair in the Nizam's country at Ryemoo had terminated successfully. The refractory killedar, who held out against the detachment of the contingent sent against him, had surrendered, the fort having been invested for ten days. "The Brigadier (Beatson) in command of the force issued on the following day a very complimentary order to the officers and men, praising their steadiness under a heavy and galling fire directed upon them whilst in the jungle surrounding the fort. The Commander-in-Chief of the Madras Army was at Secunderabad after the affair took place. The fort is in the Ellichpore district. Sir George Berkeley has since returned to Madras."

The Presidential and Mofussil papers are occupied with the exposures connected with the affairs of the North-West Bank of India. "This was one of the many establishments," observes the Bombay Times, "got up on the principle that it was better for officers who would have loans, to borrow from each other through the medium of a bank, which charged fair rates of interest and no more, than from the native usurer. The promoters of these seem to have thought it possible so to manage matters as that the self-same parties should be both borrowers and lenders, and the stock which was paid up,—a considerable portion of it was never paid at all,—was so far money borrowed from the bank itself: for this nine per cent. interest was charged, and dividends fluctuating betwixt six and seven were allowed. It must seem almost incredible at home, yet it is a fact not the less, that scarcely is there a joint-stock company amongst us that does not present us with similar things to these; and the practice is almost universal amongst those desirous of speculating, yet unprovided with the means, to borrow in the bazaar, or from the banks, money at nine or ten per cent. to be embarked in copartneries where dividends of six or seven are the best ever dreamed of! The chance of stock running up and the shares selling at premium, is one motive to such folly: another is, that a temporary accommodation is by this means sometimes attained—for other purposes than those of speculation. The Meerut, like the Benares Bank proprietors, had partaken largely of these things, and a long series of frauds, falsehoods, fabricated books and delusive balance-sheets, are exposed, such as ought to send scores of those who rank as officers and gentlemen to a penal settlement."

Major Angelo, the late Secretary of the Bank, in a letter addressed to the proprietors, strongly denies that he has misappropriated the funds, and calls for an audit, which would show, he says, that his conduct to the Bank is unimpeachable. He makes the following singular declaration:—

"Had I published the extent of possible losses, which amounted to about eighteen lacs of rupees, at the crisis, and those losses, with one exception, not caused by any imprudence of mine, it would have created a panic; a run upon the bank must have followed; the assets could not have been realized in time to meet it, and would have been greatly depreciated from the necessity of early realization at any sacrifice. This would not only have brought down the bank, but possibly have involved the shareholders individually in ruin."

The intelligence from the presidencies may be summed up in a brief space. At Calcutta, the arrival of Jung Bahadur from his mission to Europe, on the 19th December, had created some interest. He was to proceed in about a week to Katmandhu, the court of which he would astonish by the narrative of his travels. The affair between the Government and Joteepersaud, the commissariat contractor, attracts public attention. We have inserted in another column some details of this affair, and some remarks upon it by the Englishman, the accuracy of which is in some quarters impugned. Public opinion appears, however, strongly against the Government. "It is admitted," observes the Hurkaru, "that Joteepersaud may be guilty of some of the offences; but the fact of immense sums being long owing to him is undoubted, and ugly suspicions are excited by the harsh way in which he is treated, dragged, as he has been, from the precincts of an independent tribunal to which he had appealed, to be tried in the Courts subject to his debtor and prosecutor. This unfavourable feeling is encouraged further by the exuberant zeal displayed by the Company's servants in their master's cause, and for the discomfort and annoyance of his adversaries."

The Act enabling the Government to take land for the railway had been passed and promulgated. It is thereby enacted, that any railway made under the sanction of Government is a public work, and that—

"The persons employed in any public work, with their servants and workmen, may enter upon any land for surveying the ground, and in the case of a road, canal, or railway for setting out the intended line thereof, and in the case of any intended road, canal, or railway, may mark the intended line by cutting a trench, or placing landmarks along the line; and, where otherwise, the survey cannot be completed, and the line marked, may, with the sanction of the government or of any officer appointed by government for this purpose, cut down and clear away any part of any jungle or top of trees in the direction of the intended line. Provided that no person shall enter the cartilage of any house under colour of this Act without consent of the occupier, unless between sunrise and sunset, and after due notice given to such occupier."

At Bombay, Sir John Grey, who arrived on the 19th was installed on the 30th December into the offices of Commander-in-Chief and second member of Council, and on the following day, a splendid entertainment, consisting of a dinner and a ball and supper, was given in the Town-hall to his predecessor, Sir W. Cotton, which was attended by the whole élite of the community. The affairs of the railway at that Presidency were proceeding favourably. The first shipment of rails had arrived, and tenders for the sleepers had been advertised for. The railway committee having applied to Government for permission to extend their surveys towards the Ghauts, and beyond Callian (the limits of their existing contract with Government), the answer was to the effect, that the Government had no objection to the surveys being so extended, but that they could not allow the 5 per cent. interest on any money specially spent on surveys beyond the limits contemplated by the existing contract.

There is nothing worthy of note in the intelligence from the other parts of the East.

BENGAL.

THE CASE OF JOTEEPERSAUD.

The memorial of Lalla Joteepersaud to the President of the Council of India contains, amongst others, the following allegations:—

"That he is ready to admit that he has made large profits on his transactions with the Government, but is prepared to prove, on any fair investigation of his accounts, that such profits have been perfectly legitimate; that he was the contractor for the supply of grain, stores, &c. &c., to the army during the Cabool campaign, and during the Sutledge campaign, and the Punjab campaign, and that his accounts for all three campaigns are, to this hour, unadjusted and unsettled; that, according to vouchers and documents in his possession, the Government owes him about 57 lacs of rupees, exclusive of interest, and of Government paper and Bank Stock deposited by him as security for the faithful performance of his contracts, to the extent of five lacs of rupees; that in March, 1849, a convicted felon, by name Buldeo Sing, then under sentence of imprisonment in the Agra jail, from which place he has subsequently made his escape, sent to him a message, to the effect that, if he would give him (Buldeo Sing) a certain sum of money, he would not inform against him; that having nothing to fear, the memorialist refused to hold any communication with Buldeo Sing, who thereupon caused a petition to be presented to the cantonment magistrate at Agra, accusing the memorialist of making overcharges in his accounts respecting bullocks hired for the carriage of grain; that Buldeo Sing, when called upon to prove the accusation he had brought against the memorialist, admitted that he could not prove it, and that his charge was founded on hearsay, upon which statement his petition was accordingly dismissed by the cantonment magistrate; that Buldeo Sing a second time applied to him for money, and threatened that in the event of refusal he would cause the memorialist further trouble; that he again refused to hold any communication with Buldeo Sing; that Buldeo Sing then addressed a petition to the Military Board, when one member of that Board, contrary to the advice of the other members, recommended that, on the petition of the informer, an investigation should be instituted; that the matter was subsequently referred to the President in Council, and in January, 1850, an order was passed to the effect that the civil authorities in Agra should inquire into the truth of the charges brought by Buldeo Sing against the memorialist; that the depositions of the memorialist's gomastahs and servants (which had been taken in his absence) were then read over, and the memorialist was required to state what he knew regarding the hire of certain Brinjaree bullocks; that having afforded every information in his power, the memorialist begged that he might be permitted to return to his business, which was greatly prejudiced by his absence, but this request was refused, and he was informed that if he left Agra he would be brought back thana by thana—a mode of transit usually adopted when criminals are conveyed from one station to another; that a system of oppression was then resorted to, and a means of obtaining 'confessions' and 'evidence' adopted, which has had no parallel since the days of the Inquisition in Spain; that one Ghunseeram, a gomastah of the memorialist, who had charge of a most important dépôt with the army of the Punjab, was seized about eight koss from Bareilly, when on his way to Agra, and there imprisoned at Bareilly upon no charge whatsoever; that one Dhowaney Doss, a Brinjaree bullock proprietor, was kept in confinement in the joint-magistrate's own compound for twenty-five days, and urged daily to recant a deposition which he had previously sworn to in Court, in disproof of the charges brought against the memorialist, the said Dhowaney Doss having sworn that he had supplied and received payment for 7,000 bullocks, he was ordered to swear that he had supplied only 5,000 bullocks; that the memorialist having been detained at Agra for about two months against his will, made an application through his counsel that he might be permitted to leave that station, and look after his affairs, which had fallen into very serious confusion; that after much difficulty such application was granted, on condition of the memorialist entering into personal recognizances for Rs. 20,000, to appear at Agra when called upon; that having been thus released from Agra, he was advised to bring an action in her Majesty's Supreme Court for the amount of his claims against the Government, where any question of fraud would be speedily brought to an issue, and he relieved from the suspense and vexation with which he was threatened in the Mofussil Court; that in pursuance of such advice, he repaired to Calcutta, and on the 3rd October his attorneys served the attorney for the East-India Company with a notice of proceedings for the recovery of the balance due to him, amounting to Rs. 57,79,239, with interest, and that this suit is in progress; that the contract for the army of the Punjab, out of which the accusation has sprung, was forced upon him by Major Ramsay, deputy joint commissary-general, who refused to listen to the memorialist's reasons for not wishing to take a third contract, those reasons being that the Cabool accounts and the Sutledge accounts were still unsettled, and there was no knowing when he would get paid his money; that the army of the Punjab was assembling at Ferozepore, and no arrangements for the supplies had been made up to the 15th October, the date on which Major Ramsay sent for the memorialist in Meerut, and insisted on his entering on his work instantly, as there was not one moment to be lost; that the memorialist proceeded to Ferozepore, and made such speedy arrangements, that the army was enabled to march at the time appointed; that the memorialist, as in the campaign of the Sutledge, accompanied the army, and in times of the greatest difficulty and danger provided the troops, European and native, with all that they required, as will be seen from the certificate of Lord Gough, of which the following is a copy: 'Although the financial arrangements of Lalla Joteepersaud have not come under my observation, and I can offer no opinion on them, I bear willing testimony to his zealous services and great exertions as principal commissariat agent with every army I have commanded in India. In the Gwalior, Sutledge, and Punjab campaigns, I had much reason to be satisfied with the commissariat arrangements; no difficulties, however great, rendered it necessary to put the troops on half rations; and I deem it due to the respectable character of Joteepersaud to add my testimonial to the many and most creditable ones he now holds from his immediate superiors, as well as other officers of high standing.' "

This unfortunate contractor's case has given rise to an act of official tyranny on the part of a Company's servant, which shows clearly how this country would be governed if the desired object of getting rid of all independent Englishmen could be accomplished. The contractor, accompanied by his counsel, took the road to Agra, but being accidentally delayed a few days longer than the date on which he had given security to appear, the magistrate at Agra, Mr. Martin Richard Gubbins, caused his house to be forcibly entered, and property taken away to meet the penalty of half the recognizances which the said Gubbins chose illegally to inflict. Not satisfied with this, he seized the property of Mr. Lang, the prisoner's counsel, who had joined him in the recognizances. The security having been given to the Supreme Court, the authority of that tribunal was necessary to legalize any proceedings, but Mr. Gubbins, fortified by the Dalhouse Act, which secures impunity to ignorance and malice, has displayed a vigour beyond the law against a man who has for years been vainly asking for payment for the food furnished to the army during the several campaigns in Cabul and the Punjab. — Englishman.

THE RAILWAY.

We understand that the final direction of our first railway is not yet decided on. Major Kennedy has three lines under his consideration; the first through Pundooah and Burdwan, direct to Mirzapore; the second through Pundooah to Burdwan, and thence to Rajmahal; the third through Pundooah and the coal districts, to Rajmahal. Should the second line be adopted, a branch rail will be constructed by the East-India Railway Company to the Collieries.

Major Kennedy's report will be submitted for the consideration of the Governor-General, by whom it will be referred for final decision to the Court of Directors. In the mean time what is certain, is that the railway is to go to Pundooah, a distance of about 40 miles, so that no time will be lost by the reference home, as the construction of that portion of the line will probably require two years; though we have learned with great pleasure that Major Kennedy advocates, as we expected, single lines and the cheapest plans of construction, consistent with efficiency. This is a great point; and we congratulate the community on the appointment of an officer whose views are so rational and practical to the office of consulting engineer to the Government, to preside over the great work of introducing railways into this country.

The committee, associated for the purpose of establishing a company to carry out the project of a railway from the collieries, have had an interview with Major Kennedy, at which a good deal of highly interesting information on the subject of our railways was elicited. We learn that Major Kennedy expressed himself much pleased with the project of these gentlemen, and considered the views promulgated by them to be perfectly sound and practical; but as it is now certain that the East-India Railway Company will provide a railway from the collieries, either a branch or main line, there is no occasion of course for any special company for the purpose; and the functions of the committee are at an end. We hear that they were much gratified by what they heard from Major Kennedy. — Hurkaru, Dec. 24.

The act "for giving additional facilities for public works," authorizing the taking of land for railways, was passed on the 20th December.

MR. THOMAS BRACKEN.

MR. BRACKEN, a gentleman well known and highly esteemed in Calcutta, originally came to this country as a cavalry cadet, and left the army to join the house of Alexander & Co., of which he was for some years the most active partner. At the time of the failure of that house, Mr. Bracken was in England, and soon after his return to India, was appointed secretary of the Bank of Bengal, being the first person not a member of the civil service who has held that appointment. The confidence thus placed in Mr. Bracken's business talents and integrity, under the circumstances in which he was placed, is a sufficient proof of the esteem he enjoyed in this community. He retired about four years ago, intending to remain in England, with the reasonable expectation of enjoying many years of comfort, but his health suddenly gave way under a paralytic affection, and he returned to Calcutta last year, under the persuasion that the climate to which he had been so long accustomed would benefit him. In this it is to be feared he was disappointed, and for some months past no expectation was entertained of his ultimate recovery, or even of his again enjoying health enough to make existence desirable. For himself, his death can only be regarded as a happy release, but he will be long and deeply regretted by an extensive circle of old friends and acquaintances. — Englishman.

During the last week the society of India has been deprived of one of its most eminent and esteemed members, by the death of Mr. Thomas Bracken, after a long and honourable career in India of thirty-six years. After having completed his studies at Oxford, Mr. Bracken came out to India upon the strength of the new charter of 1813, and became associated with the house of Alexander & Co., then the largest mercantile establishment in Calcutta. On the retirement of the senior partners, in 1818, with colossal fortunes, which made them the envy of the poor members in council, he was admitted a member of the firm, at the same time with Col. Young, who relinquished the important office of military secretary to Government, in which he enjoyed the entire confidence of the Marquis of Hastings. Mr. Bracken continued in the house, struggling manfully against the difficulties of his position, aggravated as they were by the payments which were to be made good to the retired partners, on their own valuation of the assets, till he and his colleagues were finally constrained to yield to the pressure of circumstances, and to seek the benefit of the Insolvent Court, with obligations exceeding three millions sterling. He was subsequently appointed secretary to the Bank of Bengal, notwithstanding the strenuous effort made by Mr. Toby Prinsep to retain this berth within the circle of the Civil Service; and he was allowed, after a vigorous struggle, to enjoy the same allowance which had been given to his covenanted predecessor. His conduct in this responsible situation secured for him the gratitude of all those who had any personal interest in the institution. The failure of his health obliged him to return to England in 1847, but the voyage produced no improvement, and he was induced to seek the alleviation of a painful disease, by again resorting to a warmer climate. He returned to India a complete wreck in constitution, and after lingering for several months, has at length been released from suffering. His kindness of disposition, and the strength of his social attachments, endeared him to more than one generation of Indian residents, at the same time that his manly and vigorous mind insured him the esteem of those who were able to appreciate intellectual excellence. In his palmy days, he was one of the purest and most spirited of the public writers among us, and hundreds have dwelt with delight on the articles with which he enriched the periodical press of Calcutta. At that time, there was nothing in India superior to the productions which emanated from the pens of Thomas Bracken, John Young, and John Palmer; and if ever a collection should be made of the writings of the two former, and the correspondence of the latter, the public will learn that the "merchant princes" of the old times had other and higher claims to public estimation, than the commercial influence which they wielded. — Friend of India.

MOVEMENTS OF CORPS IN THE PUNJAB.

The meeting between the Governor-General and Maharajah Goolab Sing is to take place at Wuzerabad on the 24th December, and to be conducted on both sides with much ceremony and splendour. It is probable that the European troops at Sealkote will be brought over to Wuzerabad on the occasion, an arrangement by which three entire European regiments, with horse artillery, besides a large body of native troops, and of all arms, will be present on the imposing occasion, probably the last of the kind that will occur for some time to come. — Lahore Chron. Dec. 11.

The Governor-General has deferred his departure till tomorrow, when the camp will move in progress to Wuzerabad and Peshawur. The cavalry portion of the escort, a wing of the 7th Irregulars, commanded by Major Mulcaster, returns to Hoosheearpoor, being relieved by a wing of the 18th Irregular Cavalry, under Capt. Phillips, but the detachment of Major Mackenzie's troop of horse artillery, under Lieut. Walker, proceeds as far as Wuzerabad, where it will be relieved by a party of European horse artillery. — Ibid.

Mithenkot is the destination of the 3rd Regiment of Punjab Irregular Cavalry, and not Leia. — They will march from Umritser in the course of a few days. — Ibid. Dec. 14.

The Governor-General reached the cantonment of Serokee on the 18th inst. The camp was pitched on the brigade exercise-ground, facing the town of Wuzerabad, distant about six miles in a north-easterly direction. A levee was held on the 19th, at three in the afternoon, for the reception of the military officers of the brigade, which was of course numerously attended.

The Maharajah's visit to the Governor-General is to be returned by his Lordship on the 26th; on the 27th there is to be a grand review of the whole of the British troops, at which H.M.'s 3rd Lt. Drags. are directed to be present, which is to be followed, on the 28th, by a review of the troops in attendance on the Maharajah. — Ibid. Dec. 21.

Goolab Sing arrived at Sealkote from Jumoo on the 19th instant, under the salute due to his rank from Capt. Knatchbull's battery, H.M. 3rd Drags., and the 63rd N.I. being drawn up to do honour to the great man. His Highness will probably reach Wuzerabad on the 22nd. — Ibid.

The wing of the 18th irregular cavalry, commanded by Capt. Phillips, that marched hence in attendance on the Governor-General, will proceed on to Peshawur, instead of being relieved at Wuzerabad by a wing of the 6th irregulars, as previously intended. — Ibid.

The 4th Punjab Inf. have been ordered to march at once towards Kohat, leaving their numerous sick under the care of the civil surgeon of Lahore. — Ibid.

Instructions were received at Wuzerabad, on the 13th instant, for the immediate march to that station, from Sealkote, of the whole of H.M.'s 3rd Lt. Dragoons, the wing of H.M.'s 24th Foot, the 4th Light Cavalry (Lancers), Capt. Baldwin's troop of horse artillery, and Captain Delamain's battery, now there, so as to be present on the arrival of the most noble the Governor-General, who is expected to reach Wuzerabad, or more properly speaking Serokee, this day. On the 16th, however, a second set of instructions was received, directing H.M.'s 3rd Dragoons to stand fast at Seelkote, and the wing of the 6th Irregular Cavalry to proceed to Wuzerabad instead. There is every probability of the 3rd Dragoons, who have been marched from Umbala to Seelkote, and who have kept up their carriage three weeks in expectation of moving to Wuzerabad on the departure of the 9th Lancers, being, after all, marched back to Ferozepoor.—Lahore Chron. Dec. 18.

We believe we may intimate with confidence that Major-General Battine, whose name has long been mentioned, and with good grounds, for the Punjab command, will succeed Sir Walter Gilbert. That gallant officer, whose tour expires on January 10, will leave Lahore almost immediately after for the presidency (according to our information his departure is fixed for the 11th). He will carry with him the respect, esteem, and good-will of all who have had the pleasure either of being associated with or serving under him, and his departure will be a source of regret with all. The good understanding that has subsisted between the civil authorities and Sir Walter, during the stormy command of Sir Charles Napier, when it was extremely difficult to steer a middle course, has been a subject of especial gratification to the Government, and has smoothed many difficulties that might otherwise have occurred.—Ibid.

H.M.'s 6th Lancers left Wuzerabad on the 12th instant in progress to Umballah, but, after making one march, were recalled to Wuzerabad, where they will remain to form part of the ceremonial on the occasion of the interview between his Highness the Maharajah of Cashmere and the Governor-General, which takes place on the 23rd instant.—Mofussilite, Dec. 20.

H.M.'s 14th Dragoons are to be replaced at Lahore by H.M.'s 87th Fusiliers, who are to be marched over from Ferozepore in detachments as accommodation for their reception at Mean-Meer are completed.—Ibid.

Major-General Sir Dudley Hill, K.C.B., arrived at Loodiana on the 7th, and proceeded at once to Ferozepore on his inspection tour.—Campbell's troop of horse artillery are mentioned as being in a sad sickly state: they are still in tents.—The following is an extract from a letter dated Jubbulpore, Dec. 2nd:—"A troop of the 7th Cavalry, under Lieut. Bernell, marched out of this station, having been relieved by one from Saugor under Capt. Caulfield. It is said that Lieut. Bernell intends resigning the service on the 1st of February, 1851."—H.M.'s 9th Lancers expected to leave Wuzerabad about the 9th or 10th instant, and to arrive at Ferozepore about the 22nd or 23rd; but owing to the difficulties experienced in procuring carriages for the baggage and the women of the regiment, there was no certainty regarding the time they would move. The men are spoken of as in excellent health, and by no means dissatisfied with their change of station.—Delhi Gazette, Dec. 26.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE FOREIGN MERCENARIES IN THE NIZAM'S STATE, who might be expected to make common cause against English interference, are thus estimated by a correspondent of the Englishman. It appears that the Arabs, in the pay of the Nizam and his principal chiefs, are nominally about 7,000, but in reality about 4,000, the difference being made up by fictitious lists, and by the enlistment of Mowuluds, or half-caste Arabs. The Pathans are about 1,500, but their leaders are in command of nearly 4,000 disciplined soldiers. Besides these mercenaries, there are 1,100 Rohillas, 1,286 Sikhs in military service, 1,800 more scattered through the country, 1,442 Scindians, and a few Turks and Moguls. The whole constitutes a powerful force of 14,000 men, all accustomed to warfare, and drawn from races far superior to the Deccanees in physical qualifications and military courage. The whole of this body, with the exception, perhaps, of the Rohillas, will be prepared to resist any attempt at their summary expulsion, and they would be assisted by the thousands of half-caste Arabs scattered through the country, and by the soldiery of all descriptions who live by plunder under their protection. To counter-balance this force, there is the British contingent, the subsidiary force, and about 15,000 of the Nizam's own troops. The two first bodies, commanded by English officers, are in a far higher state of discipline than either Arabs or Pathans can pretend to, and have exhibited their courage in many a well-fought skirmish. The mercenaries would also, in the event of a struggle, have to encounter the hostility of an immense armed population, by whom they are bitterly detested, and of half the great military leaders in the state, who would rejoice in so fair an opportunity to be freed from their pecuniary obligations.

RETIREMENTS.—Capt. M. R. Onslow, 4th L. C., and Capt. J. Wilcox, 4th N. I., are about to apply for permission so retire from the service.

MR. CLIFFORD, C.S.—A dreadful accident has happened to Mr. F. W. Clifford, C.S., at Agra. He was thrown from his horse on the morning of the 18th, and has injured the vertebrae of the neck so severely, that he died on the 22nd instant. His loss will be deplored at Agra, as he is most universally and deservedly esteemed.

SIR T. TURTON.—Among the business transacted at the sitting of the Insolvent Court on the 7th December, we observe that a dividend of Rs. 3 8s. per cent. was declared on the estate of Sir Thomas Turton.

RECLAIMED THUGS.—The Mofussilite mentions that among the articles sent home to the Great Exhibition of 1851 from Upper India, is a handsome double poled tent, entirely constructed by the reclaimed Thugs at Jubbulpore.

SANATORIUM FOR THE PUNJAB.—The Lahore Chronicle publishes some particulars concerning a projected Sanatorium at Chumba in the Noorpoor hills. The place is beautifully situated in a pass, about 6,000 or 7,000 feet above the level of the sea, and will soon be easily accessible.

CAPTAIN SPENS.—We are informed, upon what we consider good authority, that, in a collision which happened on Monday last at Allipore, between the darogah of Mundal Ghaut and Captain Spens, of the Midnapore and Culmejole division, the darogah received a blow from the captain on the region of the spleen, when that organ burst, and the man almost instantly expired; whereupon Captain Spens gave up his name and address to the Thannah people—and retired. Colonel Sage, upon receiving this startling information, lost no time in officially recommending Captain Spens to be relieved from his duties as early as practicable; signifying at the same time his intention to place Mr. Brine in temporary charge until he could find a competent officer to fill that situation.—Morning Chronicle, Dec. 18.

LAKE IN THE HILLS.—The Lahore Chronicle reports the "discovery" in the hills of a large lake, only twenty miles from Mussoorie, with a fine plain around it.

SIKH RECRUITS.—The Lahore Chronicle, under his local head, mentions that some Sikhs have recently been admitted into the 65th regiment, having first submitted to the removal of their beards, as a necessary preliminary to entering a regiment of the line. This measure appears to us to be rather dictated by a desire for uniformity of appearance than by true policy. The beard among all the northern races of Hindostan is revered as a sign of manliness, and its retention would have enabled the officers, on the occurrence of any disturbance, to have detected at a single glance the presence of the Sikhs. We hope a careful record of enlisting statistics will be kept in every regiment in the north-west, so as to prevent the old Khalsa from obtaining a predominance in any one corps.—Friend of India.

SICKNESS AT LAHORE.—The condition of the 1st Fusiliers is becoming, to judge from all we can hear, more precarious than it ever was, since the commencement of the disease that has committed such dire ravages in the ranks of this gallant corps. It is true that the number of sick, which was, on the 13th of December, 263 out of a strength of 772, had, on the 19th inst., diminished to 220 out of 762, but it is also to be remembered that death has contributed fearfully to reduce the return. Since the disease, which has considerably more than decimated the regiment, first declared itself in its aggravated form, 95 men have been borne to the grave. The total number of deaths in the corps, since the 7th of Jan., on which day it marched into Lahore, has been 139. On the 13th of this month there were, including 88 convalescents, 351 rank and file unfit for duty, or nearly one-half the corps. On the 19th the number appears to have been three hundred, and that in the month of December, with apparently all the advantages of climate, season, and greatly increased medical attendance, in their favour! When we last wrote on the subject we mentioned that an improvement had taken place in the commissioned ranks, there being only three on the sick list; but it escaped our attention that the number present with the regiment had been considerably reduced; several officers having been sent away on sick leave, and some even on medical furlough to Europe. On the 13th of December there were present only fifteen regimental officers, out of a nominal strength of forty-eight, and of these fifteen, two are field officers, two on the regimental staff, three have not passed drill, and two are under two years' standing, leaving six officers to perform the duty of ten companies of European soldiers! The efficiency of the regiment is thus destroyed by a paucity of officers, almost as effectually as its utility has been impaired by the sickness of the men. For all useful purposes in India the 1st Bengal Fusiliers might just as well be in New Zealand as at Lahore.—Lahore Chron., Dec. 21.

SIR W. GOMM was to leave the presidency in progress to the north-west.

MR. REDDIE, of the firm of MacVicar & Co., is appointed Sheriff of Calcutta.

NATIVE APPRECIATION OF RAILWAYS.—The Poornochandroday, a native paper, thus speaks of the railway:—"Never, since the English rule has been recognized in the country, has there been a similar occasion to exhibit the patriotism and regard for their country which is now presented; and it is to be hoped that all will come forward and show that, when the Government undertakes a work solely for the benefit of the country, the native population have public spirit enough to support the Government in every way in their power. It appears that the railway will require about one hundred yards of land in width, and at stations an additional quantity, but the entire amount is very small; that upon this strip of land they are going to spend about one or two lacs per mile for the good of the country, and that they expect the traffic will be so large as to pay them a good dividend. Whether this be the case or not, one thing is certain, it will do more for the country, and for every human being in it, than any measure ever previously carried out; and if ever a cause deserved the earnest, cordial, and combined support of the native population, it is to aid the introduction of a railway which is eventually to connect Calcutta with Delhi and the Punjab, and to bring Bombay within forty-eight hours' travelling distance."

DR. W. MEIKLEJOHN, senior Presbyterian chaplain, Calcutta, whose death was intimated two days since, was the youngest son of the late Rev. Mr. Meiklejohn, Professor of Church History in the University of Edinburgh. He came to India in 1837; in 1845, he returned to Scotland, partly for the benefit of his health, in part to be present as representative from Calcutta of the General Assembly for the year. He was a man of good talents, excellent sound sense, and great warmth of heart and kindness of disposition. He had for some time past been suffering from liver complaint, and was on the eve of proceeding to the Cape for change of climate, when he died, generally and deeply regretted.—Bombay Times, Jan. 2.

DR. W. H. MEIKLEJOHN, the senior chaplain of St. Andrew's kirk, died on Saturday evening. He had been ill for some time, and his passage had been taken in the Wellesley for the Cape, in the hope that change of climate might restore his health.—Herkara, Dec. 16.

After the sermon at the Scotch kirk yesterday morning, a resolution, passed by the Kirk sessions, was read from the pulpit, to the effect that a subscription should be opened for placing a mural tablet in the church, and erecting a monument over the grave, to commemorate the memory of the late Rev. Dr. Meiklejohn.—Ibid. Dec. 23.

POSTAL REFORM.—There is hardly any doubt, that the scheme of postal reform to be recommended to Government will embrace an ana postage for all newspapers, a very reduced charge for the transmission of letters, and a plan for the adoption of the money order system, on a basis suitable to the requirements of the population. The native bankers and traders are looking forward with great anxiety to the advent of changes, which, as they rightly conclude, will exercise vast influence on the commercial prospects of the country. Mr. Beadon has, we believe, finished his tour of inspection, and proceeds to lay his report before Government, so that, before long, we may expect to hear of something decisive upon the subject.—Delhi Gaz.

JUNG BAHADOOR, the Nepaulese Ambassador and suite, landed from the Atalanta yesterday afternoon at half-past four o'clock, under a salute of nineteen guns, when he was received at the ghat by the private and military secretaries to the Deputy Governor, and other staff officers. His excellency was escorted to Belgatchee House on the Dum-Dum road, which has been taken for his accommodation. It is said that the ambassador will remain here a week, and it is as yet uncertain whether he will proceed to Benares by land or water. If the former, there will, of course be a considerable sum to be paid to the I. G. S. N. Company for nothing. The Atalanta was detained by going up the Gulf of Manaar, for the purpose of landing the ambassador on the island of Ramisseran; but it was found she could not approach it within a number of miles, and the commander went back to Colombo, where a small steamer, capable of going within a mile of the island, was lent to his excellency, and he proceeded in her, and visited the celebrated temple situated on it, about seven miles from the shore.—Hurkaru, Dec. 20.

PUBLIC WORKS.—A commission, consisting of Major J. P. Kennedy, consulting engineer to the Government, Major W. E. Baker, of the Engineers, and Mr. Chas. Allen, of the civil service, have been appointed for inquiring into the system of superintendence and execution of public works in the presidency of Bengal.

LIEUT. W. E. SANDYS.—Letters from Arracan report a melancholy accident near Ramree. Lieut. W. E. Sandys, the executive officer of that district, was proceeding to Sandoway in the H. C. Schooner (or gun-boat, as those vessels are locally termed) Cerulew. The serang, instead of keeping the little craft under shelter of the land, anchored her far out, and, it is said, some hours after she should have been brought to. During the evening a strong breeze sprung up, and the schooner went down at her anchors, all hands on board with her. It is providential that Mrs. Sandys and her child were left behind at Ramree, Lieut. Sandys being desirous of getting rapidly through the duty which summoned him to Sandoway. The unfortunate officer was a lieutenant in the 55th N.I., had passed college with honours; served during the campaign of the Sutlej, including the battle of Sohraon, for which he wore a medal; and commanded a detachment employed against the Sunga tribes in Arracan in 1847. During the early part of 1848 he was appointed to the department of Public Works. Lieut. Sandys was the eldest son of Mr. J. F. Sandys, who will be remembered by the historian of the Bengal press as the gentleman appointed by Mr. Buckingham to succeed him in the conduct of the Calcutta Journal when he was arbitrarily deported by Mr. Adam. The son inherited the literary predilections of the father, and in years gone by contributed to the columns of this paper.—Eastern Star, Dec. 9.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

H.M.'s 22ND AND 60TH REGTS.

Head-Quarters, Camp, Loodianah, Nov. 30, 1850.—I was delighted with the appearance and state of the 22nd regt. I found one thousand powerful, healthy men on parade, good soldiers all, and but 29 men in hospital, with trifling ailments; not a case of fever or dysentery among them. The whole regiment is in good order, and fit in all points for war.

My stay was too short, and the ground too precipitous, to exercise the regiment, but I saw enough to assure me that it is fit to take its place in a line of battalions, or to be thrown out in front as a light corps, and in either position to do itself and its commanding officer credit. I told the regiment that I feel proud of being its colonel, and I repeat it, I am proud,—very, very proud of it.

I brought the 22nd and 60th into the hills, that I might have two effective regiments under my hand, in case of sudden need. I hope that my successor will keep them both in their present quarters for the next two years. He will then always have two thousand healthy, strong and practical soldiers ready for service.

I was glad to see the friendship which exists between these two fine regiments. This makes men work well together in action, and in every way that become soldiers. I now bid adieu for the present to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates, of my regiment, with the hope that we shall again meet in England. But meet again or not meet again, my wishes will always be for their health, and for the glory of their colours in battle.

C. J. NAPIER, Gen. C.-in-C. and Col. of H.M.'s 22nd regt. of foot.

GENERAL SIR W. M. GOMM, K.C.B.

Head-Quarters, Calcutta, Dec. 6.—Her Majesty having been graciously pleased to nominate General Sir William Maynard Gomm, K.C.B., to the chief command of all her Majesty's forces serving in the East Indies, and the Honourable the Court of Directors having appointed him to the command of the Honourable the Company's forces in India, from his assumption of the foregoing appointment, he proceeds to announce in General Orders that, with the concurrence of his Honour the President in Council, he has this day assumed the duties of his command.

2. In making this announcement he is sensible that he should be greatly failing in the deference due to the highest military merit and renown did he not accompany it with a direction that all the honours hitherto paid to General Sir Charles Napier, G.C.B., be continued to his Excellency by the united armies of India so long as he shall remain upon its territory.

3. The Commander-in-Chief claims permission briefly to give expression to a soldier's pride on first feeling himself at the head of an army, bright with victory and healthy through discipline, the joint result of its own valiant and loyal spirit steadily displayed, and of the skill and energy with which this has been hitherto directed in the chief command.

4. It will be the duty and the aim of the Commander-in-Chief to uphold the character of the army at its present enviable height, undiminished and unimpaired, both in quarters and in camp.

5. For thorough success in this grateful pursuit he relies with confidence on the cordial and zealous support of superior officers of all ranks and degrees throughout the combined services, and on the hearty concurrence of their subordinates in command.

6. His surest guarantee of success beyond all this, is founded on his knowledge, that the code of rules and regulations for the guidance of the army, and the regimental system prescribed by the Duke of Wellington, are adhered to in their full integrity by all corps of her Majesty's service in India, and emulously subscribed to by those of the sister service of the East-India Company.

7. The Commander-in-Chief has only further to announce on this first occasion of his presenting himself to the army of India, that it is his steady purpose to follow up in their full spirit the views of his most distinguished predecessors in this great command, for promoting the cause of discipline in corps in all its bearings, and the welfare and comfort of the individual soldier, both British and native, by all appliances and means legitimately within his province to bring into operation.

8. All reports, returns, and correspondence relative to her Majesty's and the Hon. Company's forces, are to be sent to the heads of the various military departments, as usual.

9. The Commander-in-Chief will proceed shortly to join the forces in the N. W. Provinces, and will inform the adjutant-general of the army when he leaves Calcutta, in order that any communication of importance, requiring his Excellency's immediate decision, may be forwarded to meet him on the march.

The undermentioned officers are appointed on his excellency's personal staff, from this date:—

Capt. E. R. W. Wingfield Yates, H.M.'s 82nd foot, military secretary.

Capt. J. Halket, Coldstream guards; Ensign the Hon'ble E. W. Douglas, 17th Bombay N.I.; and Capt. G. G. Stappylton, H.M.'s 13th light infantry, aides-de-camp.

Capt. Lord Frederick J. Fitzroy, Grenadier guards, ext. aide-de-camp.

Brevet-maj. C. J. Otter, H.M.'s 61st foot, Persian interpreter.

The whole of the head-quarters' staff and establishments, lately in attendance on his Excellency General Sir Charles J. Napier, G.C.B., during his visit to Ferozepore, will proceed without delay towards Cawnpore, taking up the camp equipage now in store at Kurnaul, to meet his excellency the commander-in-chief on his progress towards the upper provinces.

By order of his excellency the Commander-in-chief.

W. A. J. MAYHEW, Captain,
Offg. Depy. Adjutant Genl. of the Army.

CHAPLAINS.

Fort William, Home Department, Ecclesiastical, Dec. 6, 1850.—Notification.—The Hon. the Court of Directors having been pleased to augment the complement of chaplains and assistant chaplains on the Bengal establishment, from fifty-nine to sixty-three, and to authorise the number of full chaplains to be increased from nineteen to twenty-one, it is hereby notified, that the Bengal ecclesiastical establishment will, from the date of the receipt of the Hon. Court's despatch, viz. Nov. 1, 1850, comprise 21 full chaplains, and 42 assistant chaplains.

SIR CHARLES NAPIER'S FAREWELL ORDER TO THE OFFICERS OF THE ARMY.

Head-Quarters, Camp Ferozepore, Dec. 9, 1850.—It would neither be justifiable nor becoming in me to interfere with the private affairs of officers in the army, which I have the honour to command, so long as those private affairs do not interfere with the public service. But when they injure the public service; when they reflect disgrace upon our uniform; it becomes my duty to draw attention to the subject, and in this public manner to call upon the officers of the Queen's and Company's services to exert themselves in maintaining the honour of their regiments, by assisting the Commander-in-Chief in putting a check upon those, whose debts are no less injurious to the fair fame of the military profession than discreditable to their regiments, and ruinous to themselves.

2. It is more than one year since I received a very excellent letter from a brigadier, upon this important subject. I had then just assumed my present command, I waited to see more clearly how matters stood, before I felt justified in touching upon affairs of so private a nature. From that time to this day, a considerable portion of my time has been taken up in the examination of weekly, if not daily, complaints against officers for non-payment of debts, and in some instances, the ruin of tradesmen has been consequent on that cause. There is, therefore, a call upon me for this order:—a call which cannot be cast aside.

3. When it is considered that the army is of an immense magnitude, I am bound to say that the number of officers who have misconducted themselves in a manner so derogatory to the character of gentlemen is not inordinate, but, at the same time, it is so large as to demand repression with a strong hand; and I do trust that the officers of regiments will take not only vigorous but rigorous measures to bring those who are guilty to a sense of shame at being ordered to appear before a court of requests for debt. An officer, who is summoned before a court of requests, must feel conscious that, although wearing the British uniform, he is not standing there in the character of a gentleman! He must feel, if he feels at all, disgust at his own degraded position. He may by possibility have been unfortunate; he may only have been thoughtless, but must feel in his heart that he is before the public in a group with the infamous, with those who are cheats, and whose society is contamination. A well-bred gentleman cannot support this feeling!

4. I am not merely a rich man, speaking to those who are poor. I have known poverty, and have lived for years on less than half what every ensign in this army receives, and so lived, too, in a more expensive country than India. I take no merit to myself for this—I only state it as a fact, that I may not be taunted on the threshold of my argument, by being told I know nothing of the difficulties of poverty. I do know them perfectly—and I know more—I know that every ensign in India can live well on his pay, and that many, who have never appeared before a court of requests, have largely assisted their families—largely, compared to their means.

5. I do not say that a subaltern officer can give dinners; I do not say he can indulge in many luxuries; I do not say he can cast off all self-denial; nor do I see why he should do any of these things. The proceedings before these Courts of Requests are the shameful proofs that he should not! When an officer gets a commission, he, without that labour which attends the initiation into most other professions, at once receives a good income, and that before he has any knowledge of his trade. In most other professions a young man hardly gets his food at the commencement. The families of many officers, if not of all, have made great sacrifices to gain this amply sufficient income for these officers, and these last have no right whatever to live as if they were gentlemen of landed property; nor as men do, who have served longer, and earned a higher rank and greater income than themselves. It is the desire to imitate those above us, and not to regard our own means, that is mischievous to all, and most so to young men.

6. The result is ruin to numbers: To show this I will quote from two brigadier's letters, sent officially for my perusal upon this degrading subject. "At a Court of Requests held on the 6th instant, there were 53 cases, and (with the exception of four of trifling amount) all against subalterns—amount Rs. 4875."—Again the same officer writes, "Decrees of 'Execution General' are not unfrequent, and the efficiency of the officers seriously affected by their pecuniary embarrassments." Again, "although I am aware that it is very difficult to control the expenditure of officers, yet, when they are brought forward thus publicly, month after month, I consider it my duty to bring to the notice of his Excellency the involved circumstances of the officers under my command, with whom, in other respects, I have no fault to find."

7. Another brigadier writes thus:—"Another officer I know enjoys champagne tiffin, leaving his servants to drag him before the court for their just claims. How humiliating for those connected with and proud of the profession!" Yes, it is humiliating, and long experience tells me, that it is to the exemplary conduct of regimental officers, and to the sentences of courts-martial, that the army must look for correcting this baseness in individuals. That the Commander-in-Chief will support the officers of regiments I may venture to assert, whoever that Commander-in-Chief may be; but the close and dominating power to keep down such misconduct, is in the messes. The man must be base in every sense of the word that can bear the contumely of his comrades, incurred by a disgraceful action. But I must not confine myself to messes alone. Commanders of regiments should strenuously exert themselves to maintain the good name of their regiments. They should recollect that "Courts of Requests," when they decide that justice to a tradesman, or other creditor, demands of them to put an officer under stoppages, pronounce that the said officer is a man so lost to all sense of propriety, that he endeavours to defraud his creditor, and therefore can no longer be considered in the light of a gentleman. He is forced to be honourable against his will; and it is the bounden duty of the commanding officer to refuse to such a person all indulgence, and to hold him so strictly in hand that such misconduct on the officer's part may at all events be as disagreeable to that officer himself, as it is to his regiment and his tradesmen!

8. That I am not exaggerating these matters I could easily prove by publishing such facts to the officers of the two armies, as would shock every honest and honourable man, and show how entirely I am authorized in saying that these facts are, to the last degree, dishonourable. One commanding officer of a regiment writes thus: "I can confidently assert, that the numerous cases brought monthly before the Courts of Requests is a disgrace to the army we belong to." This is one among many who are labouring for the honour of the service.

9. I have not sought for this information from officers; these letters came uninvited from men of high rank in both the Queen's and Company's services, and have been sent to me, formally, as official complaints! They are men who feel as every officer in the Queen's and Company's services ought to feel.

10. But while stating how very disgraceful it is for an officer to appear before a Court of Requests, I will say a few words upon the causes of such conduct.

11. The first is, that some young men get commissions without having had much education, or perhaps a vulgar one, which is worse. These officers are not aware that honesty is inseparable from the character of a thorough-bred gentleman. A vulgar man, who "enjoys a champagne tiffin" and swindles his servants (as a brigadier writes to me, when speaking of these matters, and referring to an officer under his immediate command) may be a pleasant companion to those who do not hold him in contempt, as a vulgar knave—but he is not a gentleman! His commission makes him an officer—but he is not a gentleman! and I claim that character in all its integrity for the officers of her Majesty's service and for those of the honourable East India Company. I speak of men whose own misconduct has brought them into debt; not of those whom misfortune has thrown into debt. These last are very few in number, and very unfortunate indeed to be on the same list with those whom they despise! Of these, who are so unfortunate, I need not speak; their own exertions to pay their debts are unceasing and honourable.

12. The second cause is, that young men arrive in India and think that, having escaped from school, it is mainly to be dishonourable. So they cheat the Government by not attending to their duties, and they cheat their tradesmen by not paying their debts. They meet champagne drinking swindlers, who sponge on them, and lead them into expense.—Thus comes debt—then bankers are at hand to advance money. Thus they become involved past redemption, and soon the habit of being constantly in debt makes them grow callous to the proper feelings of a gentleman.

13. Now, if all officers commanding regiments were to do their duty (as great numbers do), and if the body of officers of each regiment would give such a commander proper support, this course would not be followed by young men on their arrival in India. By strict lessons in their duties, and plenty of drill, the commanding officers of regiments would prevent Government being cheated; and by the proper gentlemanlike conduct and honourable sentiments which should pervade every mess, reproaching expense and extravagance of all sorts, and by practising rigid economy in the establishment, the young officer would at once learn that to drink unpaid-for champagne, unpaid-for beer, and to ride unpaid-for horses, is to be a cheat and not a gentleman.

14. The third cause of debt is the constant marching of regiments. This has no remedy in time of war, and I have strongly recommended that it should be as much as possible avoided in time of peace. It is very severe on the troops and on the state itself. The Governor-General concurred in my recommendation, that the troops should not be generally relieved this year, and I hope none may be moved for some years to come, if the peace continues. However, these marches ought not to throw careful and honourable men into debt. They are, when required, the proper and just demands of the service, and every man can be and ought to be fully prepared to meet them. Still, these marches are causes of difficulty, and the difficulties which result from them are, in some degree, excusable in very young and inexperienced men, but not so in old officers, who have risen to the rank of Lieutenant.

15. The fourth cause of debt is, the extravagance of messes. This I entirely charge upon the commanding officers. Many regiments (both Queen's and Company's) have economical messes, especially in the Queen's regiments, because the number of officers in the latter is so large. But many regiments are extravagant. And in all cases where a mess is extravagant, the fault lies with the commanding officer. I have heard it said by some, that "the commanding officer ought not to interfere with the mess, which should be considered as the private table of the officers." Now people who talk thus forget that there is a wide difference between a mess and a private gentleman's table. The last is regulated by his income, and there is but one income and one master to be consulted as to expense. But in a mess there are many masters, and the mess must be regulated by the income of the poorest. The majority have no right to crush the poor and prudent officers, with the extent of whose liabilities they are utterly ignorant. Must an officer, because he belongs to a mess, explain all his distresses, his misfortunes, his generousities, his follies, to the members of a mess, in order to prove his incompetency to meet his extravagance? Common sense forbids this; yet, unless the mess is on such an economical footing as to enable the ensign, on his pay, to join it, this infringement on a gentleman's private liabilities and demands must take place; and the commanding officer, alone, can protect every one under his orders from the often insufferable presumption of mess committees. He, alone, can properly direct and so rule matters that the ensign can live on his pay, and live becomingly; that is to say, save on his pay! I do not call drinking wine or beer, or inviting friends, "becoming." It may be so, or it may not; according to the means and feelings of each individual:—All I maintain is, that the mess must leave each member free to do as his means enable him, for each officer is individually responsible for his conduct to the public from which he receives his pay. This is justice, and justice can never be wrong. The pay of an ensign is sufficient for his just expenditure, and the commanding officer is, and can alone be responsible that this rule of rigid and just economy is never infringed. What officer will go to a mess committee and tell his private misfortunes, or his difficulties? Yet this is what those people (who say that the commanders of regiments ought not to interfere with the mess) want. They are overbearing tyrants, who want to set aside the private affairs of officers, and to make those officers, who cannot afford such extravagance, pay for these persons' selfish enjoyments, which they want to indulge in at other men's expense. That is the real object of those who wish to prevent the interference of commanding officers. But the rules of both Queen's and Company's services give commanding officers the right to interfere, and the Commander-in-Chief will take care to hold him responsible, that the ensign has his rights; namely, the power to live at the mess, as becomes an officer and a gentleman—drinking water if he pleases, or drinking champagne if he pleases; but, able out of his pay to liquidate his debts like a gentleman, drinking what he may. That is to say, that the necessary mess charges leave him enough out of his pay to cover all his other reasonable expenses.

16. The fifth cause of expense and ruin I believe to be the banks. They afford a ready means for the young and foolish to obtain money, but at an enormous interest. I have heard the objection to banks contested on the score that formerly officers, who now borrow from banks, borrowed from natives, and even from their own soldiers; that it is, therefore, better for an officer to be in debt to a bank than to natives. I am unable to say what was formerly done; but I am perfectly sure that, whatever facilitates the borrowing of money produces ruin to young officers; encouraging those vices which are the most mischievous, especially racing, a vice always accompanied by gambling and extravagance.

17. Some of the evils which I have touched upon may be remedied by the Commander-in-Chief; some by commanders of regiments; some by the officers of regiments as bodies; and some by individuals themselves. To these I must leave them. I can only offer my advice as I quit the scene. To-day I am Commander-in-Chief; a week hence I shall be no more to the armies of India than a private gentleman. But the armies of India must ever be much and dear to me! For nine years my whole energies, such as they are, have been devoted to the honour and glory of the Company's troops. I may say that I have become as much identified with the armies of the three presidencies, as if I had risen from their ranks. I have jealously guarded their honour, and I have fought at their head.

18. I now leave them for ever. But in the retirement of private life, although no longer able to serve them, the destinies of the Indian armies will ever occupy my thoughts.

19. I here take leave of them, hoping that this order will be of use, as the last which I can issue to the armies of India!

(Signed) C. J. NAPIER, General,
Commander-in-Chief, East Indies.

MILITARY FUND.

Fort William, Dec. 20, 1850.—The Honourable the President of the Council of India in Council is pleased to publish, for general information, the following extract of a military letter from the Honourable the Court of Directors to the Governor of the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal, No. 117, dated 23rd October, 1850, paragraph 4.

Letter, No. 101, dated 18th June, 1850.—Transmit, with reference to paragraph 98 of Court's Despatch, dated 30th Aug., 1826 (published in General Order, No. 21, dated 26th January, 1827), a letter from the Directors of the Bengal Military Fund, requesting to be informed whether compulsory subscriptions to the fund should be confined to the unmarried classes, or be also imperative on the married members.

Para. 4. It is a condition of appointment to our military service, that all officers shall subscribe to the Military Fund; and we consider it to be imperative on those who are married to subscribe in that class.

COURT MARTIAL.

LIEUT. ROBERT FAITHFUL FANSHAWE, INVALIDS.

Head Quarters, Nov. 27, 1850.—At a general court-martial re-assembled at Secrole, Benares, on Tuesday, Oct. 29, 1850, Lieut. R. F. Fanshawe, of the invalid estab. and adj. and q. m. of the Eur. invalids at Chunar, was arraigned on the following charges; viz.:—

1st. For officerlike conduct and direct disobedience of the standing general order of Dec. 30, 1823, in having, at Chunar, at various times between May 16, 1848, and Aug 2, 1848, borrowed several sums of money, amounting in all to Rs. 922 8 a. or thereabout, from Sergeant G. Hind, of the Eur. invalids at Chunar.

2d. For highly unbecoming conduct in having, at Chunar, between Jan. 6, 1849, and May 28, 1849, occupied and kept possession of a house belonging to a widow named Zinu (commonly called French) without her consent and contrary to her wish; and for having withheld from her the rent of the said house, Rs. 50 per month, for the whole or a great part of the period of his occupation, until forced to pay it by awards of Courts of Requests at the suit of Mrs. French, the rent for Feb. Mar. Apr. and May, 1849, being still unpaid to Mrs. French.

3rd. For highly unbecoming conduct in having, at Chunar, between June 26, 1848, and May 29, 1849, inclusive, or for various periods respectively within that time, withheld their just wages from the undermentioned servants in his employ, viz.:—Soobratie, Besesur, Ghoon Ghoon, Dursun, Buchoo, Phulloo, Hingun, Beharee, Bustee, Sajeawun, Kaleechurn, Berjoo, Bechun, Ramjanee, Sona; thereby causing distress and loss to these individuals.

4th. For having, at Chunar, between April 18, 1849, and June 3, 1849, fraudulently misapplied the sum of Rs. 131. 0a. 1p. or thereabouts, being the aggregate of the estates of Bom. P. Burke, Gunner W. Brown, and Private T. Barron, deceased, with which he, Lieut. Fanshawe, was intrusted for the purpose of distribution to the heirs of the deceased, as the officer in charge of the companies to which the deceased men belonged.

5th. For having, between March 1, 1848, and June 3, 1849, fraudulently misapplied the sum of Rs. 34, or thereabouts, drawn by him, as adjutant of the European invalids, which ought to have been paid, and is still due, to Schoolmaster-sergeant W. Law, of the European invalids.

Finding.—Of the first charge,—Guilty.

Of the second charge,—Guilty, with the exception of the word "highly," substituting "about the middle of March," for "Jan. 6," excepting the words "the whole or a great," excepting that there was only one award of a Court of Requests, and that the rent for Feb. March, April, and May, 1849, is still unpaid to the extent only of Rs. 182-12-1; also, that it appears the prisoner did not originally occupy the house without the consent of the owner.

Of the 3rd charge,—Not guilty, and acquits him thereof. The Court find that the prisoner did owe the wages to the servants as stated in the charge, excepting to Phulloo, Hingun, Bustee, and Ramjanee; but, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, attach no guilt to the fact.

Of the fourth charge,—Guilty, with the exception of the word "fraudulently," and substituting "Aug. 4, 1848," for "April, 18, 1849."

Of the fifth charge,—Guilty, with the exception of the word "fraudulently."

Sentence.—To be very severely reprimanded.

Confirmed.

C. J. NAPIER, Gen. C.-in-C.

Remarks by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.—I am unable to understand upon what principle the Court found Lieut. Fanshawe guilty of the first charge and yet fails to cashier this officer? An officer who is capable of writing a begging letter (asking for money) to a sergeant under his command, is unfit to hold a commission, even had this act not been a direct breach of the general orders, and had been the only one of which he has been convicted.

I am equally unable to understand upon what grounds the Court acquits the prisoner on the third charge! The Court finds that he, a British officer, did owe money to his servants; it is also proved that these poor men were much distressed thereby, and, in consequence, were obliged to borrow money! moreover, while Lieut. Fanshawe did not pay these men their wages, this officer kept three horses (for I am warranted in taking it for granted that he did not keep three grooms without he kept three horses), his duty being confined to the fort of Chunar!

I do not know to what "peculiar circumstances" the Court can possibly refer to excuse such an act of dishonesty and want of feeling! The only "peculiar circumstance" I can find is, that Lieut. Fanshawe chose to contract debts which he well knew that he could not pay! I cannot agree with the Court in its extraordinary opinion that "no guilt attaches to the fact" of not paying servants their just wages, and forcing them to borrow money in their distress! I am inclined to believe that if the Government kept the members of this Court eight months or a year out of their pay, we should hear very different sentiments expressed.

Reprimand.—Lieutenant Fanshawe! your sentence is to be "severely reprimanded." I cannot understand why the court-martial did not cashier you, as, in my opinion, it ought to have done. Public duty makes me regret that you have escaped from a just punishment, but I shall rejoice if the very lenient punishment inflicted may improve your conduct as a British officer.

MADRAS.

THE NIZAM'S STATE.

"Two circumstances have occurred which in a marked manner indicate the temper of the Arabs towards us, and their readiness to come into collision with us. Major Babington, who was marching to Nagpore at the head of his regiment, had some dispute with a party of about forty Arabs, at a village called Bitch-kondah. The Arabs in their insolence poked a Sepoy in the back with a poignard, and tore Major Babington's jacket. These were acts of cool defiance and contempt; but Major Babington, who could have annihilated them, showed the utmost forbearance, and contented himself with making a report of their conduct, at once a proof of his temper and self-possession. General Fraser will, in all probability, have the Arabs punished; an apology from the Government is no amends, for the Arabs are not within the control of the Government. The other circumstance is that a predatory and refractory Seedee, having possessed himself of a village called Mow Kakur Mow, replied to Col. Beatson, who has invested the place and who called upon him to surrender, promising to give them their lives, that God had given them their lives and had besides given them ammunition to defend them with. Col. Beatson has sent for two eighteen-pounders, and the Seedee will be beaten into submission; but the temper of these people is to risk a battle with us, and they have not unfrequently used defiance to provoke us to it. What the measures of the Government of India may be if the debt is not paid, is not known; but if it press upon the interests of the Arabs, it is a moot point as to whether the opulent chieftains will be able to arrange a composition, or whether the body of Arabs will constrain them into risking a contest with us. I rather think the latter, for if the Arabs continue to maintain their extravagant claims, I do not see what composition to satisfy them could be made. They profess that they want nothing but their just due, and will return to their country when that is paid them, but what their just dues are will form the difficulty. The contribution is all upset, the Nizam, without any pressure from abroad, has cut down the quotas to a mere pittance. There is now no resource left in this scheme for paying the debt, but as the Nizam sent 32,000 gold mohurs to his treasurer to contribute towards the payment of the debt, it would indicate that he still had treasures left sufficient to discharge it. But his highness acts so totally without any sort of calculation, that there is no coming to any conclusion from his actions."—Englishman.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE RAJA OF TRAVANCORE has just sent to Messrs. Arbuthnot and Co. here, a splendid present, to be transmitted to her Majesty Queen Victoria. It is a throne or chair of state, composed of polished ivory and inlaid or set with abundance of pearls, rubies, and other precious stones. The work is entirely of native design and workmanship.—Crescent.

MR. E. F. ELLIOT.—The natives of Madras have properly appreciated the really valuable services of Mr. E. F. Elliot, as principal commissioner of the late Petty Court, and intend to present to him an address expressive of their esteem and respect for this very able and energetic public officer.—Athenaeum, December 12.

THE HON. J. F. THOMAS, Esq., member of council, has proceeded to Ceylon in the steamer Oriental.—Ibid. Dec. 14.

THE BISHOP OF MADRAS and suite landed at Cannanore on the 6th December from the steamer Hugh Lindsay.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.—Although we only a few days ago expressed our belief that Sir George Berkeley had not sent in his resignation of the command of the Madras army, and perhaps we were correct in so doing, we have now reason to believe that his Excellency will not pass another hot season in India. The Commander-in-Chief's departure will take place, we are told, in March next.—United Serv. Gaz. Dec. 13.

From a letter from Secunderabad, dated December 8th, we learn that Sir George Berkeley, the Commander-in-Chief, is to hold a levee on Tuesday the 10th, at eleven a.m. A grand ball is to be given on the 12th to Sir George by the 2nd European Lt. Inf., who are also to entertain him and his staff at a dinner. The residents are also soon to give a grand ball.—Athenaeum, Dec. 14.

BOMBAY.

'MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL of November 25th arrived at Bombay on December 29th.

Dr. BUIST is appointed sheriff of Bombay.

INDUS FLOTILLA.—We are rejoiced to hear that it is in contemplation to immediately increase the force of the Indus flotilla. This has been talked of for months, but it appears the measures proposed by the late commodore of the flotilla will at length be carried out. The steamers on the Indus, though expensive, have so often proved themselves up to their work, that we can hardly imagine the Government would without sufficient cause, reduce that branch of the public service.—Kurrachee Advertiser, Dec. 14.

Messrs. DADABHOY AND MUNCHERJEE PESTONJEE, owing to the almost unprecedented pressure in the money market, have thought it the best course they could have adopted to bring their affairs to a termination for the present, and with the view of doing due justice to every one of the creditors, place in the hands of four trustees, their valuable assets, which much more than cover the liabilities.—Telegraph, Jan. 3.

This event withdraws, for the present, from active employment two of our most able and energetic Parsee merchants—merchants who for a long period were believed to be the possessors of enormous wealth. Dadabhoj Pestonjee, in particular, has always been distinguished for the philanthropy of his disposition and liberality of his opinions—taking an active lead amongst the members of his active race in all matters of native improvement.—Bombay Times, Jan. 2.

THE STEAM FRIGATE QUEEN, which made such a splendid run from Aden with the last mail, having run out of coals, was obliged, we are told, to burn her launch, spars, lower deck, and many other articles of both the gunner's and boatswain's stores, to keep her steam up. The nuisance of having such vessels employed as mail packets, where expedition is the chief concern, is now becoming intolerable, and must by some means or other be put a stop to. The idea of the mail being 13 days on its way from Aden, after having accomplished the distance from London to that port in 20, is unbearable, and ought to be at once protested against in a body by the community in general, and the mercantile interest in particular.—Ibid.

COTTON CULTIVATION.—We have received letters from the cotton districts around Broach, as well as from that place itself.

The statements contained in which are well calculated to sustain that confidence in the cotton productive powers of the soil of Guzerat, which we have always entertained, provided a stimulus to its cultivation be properly applied. We learn that the crop now rapidly approaching maturity will equal, if not exceed 300,000 bales; that of last season having reached only 200,000. The quality promises to be good, and if due measures are now taken whilst there is time to warn the ryots and all the intermediate parties between the ryots and the shippers at Bombay, of the consequences of wilful adulteration, or even of a want of due care in preserving the staple from dirt and in cleansing it from seed; if we repeat, these precautions are taken in time, the result will, we feel confident, be to raise the character of Surat cotton in the Liverpool and other home markets, and to create a demand for the article heretofore unknown.—Telegraph, Jan. 3.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

LIEUT.-GEN. SIR WILLOUGHBY COTTON'S FAREWELL ORDER TO THE BOMBAY ARMY.

Head-Quarters, Bombay, Dec. 29, 1850.—On the occasion of assuming the command of the Bombay army, nearly four years ago, Lieut.-gen. Sir Willoughby Cotton adverted in just terms of commendation to the professional merits of that body of soldiers, founded on previous knowledge and observation. A higher and nearer relation to them has not only confirmed the sentiments then expressed, but has enabled him to become more intimately acquainted with, and to appreciate more fully, the strong claims to his approbation of every branch and grade of H.M.'s and the Hon. Company's troops under his command during the latter period.

On the eve, therefore, of resigning his present honourable position, the C.-in-C. discharges a gratifying duty in recording his unqualified admiration of the distinguished gallantry, of the high principles of military discipline, obedience, and alacrity in performing their respective duties, which have uniformly marked all ranks of those of whom he now takes leave; and H. Ex. desires that these sentiments may be communicated to every regiment on the establishment, on the first parade after the receipt of this order.

To particularize individuals, where all so highly deserve to be named, is a difficult matter; but official communication has necessarily brought some officers and departments more immediately under H. Ex.'s notice than others, and these he considers it just to specify singly and collectively.

Of the professional zeal and merit of Maj. Gen. Auchmuty, c.b., commg. the Poona Div. of the army, and of Brig. Gen. Manson, c.b., now commg. the Scinde Div., and who for a considerable time held the former command, the C.-in-C. has had personal opportunities of judging; and to the merits of both these officers he bears the fullest testimony.

To Brig. Gen. James, formerly commanding the Northern Division, and who has lately been transferred to the Southern, H. Ex. begs to offer his best acknowledgments for zeal in performing the duties which have devolved on him. The same are also due to brigas. and officers commg. detached stations and regiments, and they are here cordially tendered.

In acknowledging the able assistance which he has received from the heads of departments of the staff of the army, his Exc. has particular gratification in offering his sincere thanks to Lieut. col. Hancock, adj. gen. of the army, for the able and unremitting attention he has devoted to the efficient discharge of the numerous and important duties of that department; to Major Conway, c.b., act. dep. adj.-gen. to H.M. forces, and to Capt. Heatley, brig. maj. Queen's troops, the C.-in-C. has to convey his fullest satisfaction with the able manner in which the staff duties of those branches of the army have been conducted.

To Lieut. col. Holland, his Exc. begs to offer his cordial thanks for his zeal and attention since he has entered on the duties of qr. mr. gen., which afford the fullest assurance of the high value of his future services in that important department. The able assistance the C.-in-C. has derived from Lieut. col. Ogilvie, judge adv. gen. upon all occasions, claims his grateful acknowledgment: to a thorough knowledge of military law that officer unites a clearness of judgment and honourable and rigid impartiality. Major Davidson, the comm. gen. and the several officers acting under him, have discharged their onerous duties in a way fully to meet the C.-in-C.'s approval.

As the full efficiency of the medical department of the army has always been regarded by his Exc. as an object of the utmost importance, he feels it due to record his acknowledgments to the members of the Medical Board; to the act. dep. insp. gen. of H. M.'s hosp.; and to the several sup. surgs., for their unremitting attention to their professional duties.

To his mil. sec. Lieut.-Col. Brooke, c.b., the C.-in-C. offers the thanks which are due to an excellent officer, who has unremittingly and zealously discharged his duties : and to the other members of his personal staff he proffers his warm acknowledgments for their attention and assistance.

Finally, Lieut.-Gen. Sir Willoughby Cotton bids an affectionate adieu to all under his command, and assures them of the sincere and lively interest he will ever feel in their future honour and welfare.

LIEUT. GENL. SIR WILLOUGHBY COTTON, G.C.B.

Bombay Castle, 30th December, 1850.—The Rt. Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to notify, that his Excellency Lieut. Gen. Sir Willoughby Cotton, G.C.B., has this day resigned the office of Commander-in-chief of the Bombay army and his seat as a member of the Council of this presidency.

To Sir Willoughby Cotton, as Commander-in-chief, the Governor in Council considers the army of Bombay to be largely indebted for the ability, impartiality, and energy, with which its affairs have been administered, its welfare promoted, and its interests guarded and preserved. The efficiency of the army in all its departments, the state of its discipline, and its constant readiness for service in the field, were practically tested by the call for a large detachment to take part in the recent operations in the Punjab. The rapidity, and at the same time the perfect order, with which this corps was assembled and organized, the signal gallantry it displayed in action, and its unshaken discipline in every variety of situation incident to a trying campaign, are well known, and amply prove that during the tenure of the Command-in-chief by Sir Willoughby Cotton, the high character of the Bombay army has been fully and most honourably maintained.

To Sir Willoughby Cotton, as a member of the Council, the public acknowledgments of the Government are justly due for the sound advice with which his Excellency's extensive experience and thorough knowledge of the Indian army and of warfare in India have enabled him to assist their consultations on all questions of military policy.

All military honours as Commander-in-Chief and as a member of the Government will continue to be paid to Lieutenant-General Sir Willoughby Cotton until his Excellency's departure from India.

LIEUT. GEN. SIR JOHN GREY'S ADDRESS TO THE BOMBAY ARMY.

Head-Quarters, Bombay, Dec. 30, 1850.—With reference to the Government General Order, No. 748, of this day's date, Lieutenant-General Sir John Grey has the honour of assuming command of the forces on the Bombay establishment.

The high character which the Bombay army has gained for gallantry in the field and orderly conduct in cantonments is sufficient proof of the admirable state of its discipline, and it is with no ordinary feelings of pride and gratification that the Lieutenant-General takes on him this distinguished command.

It will be the Lieutenant-General's aim to preserve the army in the high state of efficiency in which it has been made over to him by his able predecessor, Lieutenant-General Sir Willoughby Cotton, and he confidently relies on all officers and soldiers for a zealous support and co-operation in this endeavour.

CHINA.

The following memorial, presented to the emperor by Sae-shangah, commander-in-chief of the garrison of Peking, is published in the Peking Gazette:—

"On the 21st day of the present month, the keeper of the Seu-en-woo gate reported the seizure of a book, together with other papers, upon the person of one Ting-Kwangming, a native of Shan-tung, while passing through the gate. The prisoner, being examined, deposed as follows:—

"I am thirty years of age, and a native of the district of Leih-ching, in Tsenan-foo, the capital of Shan-tung. From my youth up, I have been brought up in the Romanist faith. In the 24th and 25th years of Taoukwang, while on a visit of pleasure to Taegan-foo, I heard that Lo-luy-sze, a native of Rome, a city in the Great West, was lodging in a shop in the town, and being a member of the same Church with himself, I went to the house to place myself under his guidance. He gave me to understand that he had, when residing at Canton, assisted Keying in arranging the affairs of the English barbarians, and had so won upon him by his good conduct, that that statesman promised to represent him most favourably to the emperor, directing him to wait in Shan-tung until he heard from him. Not receiving any further tidings from him on the subject, he left Shan-tung for Shanghai, where he built himself a house, from which, with a telescope, he kept a look-out against the incursions of the red-haired Englishmen, whom he thus succeeded more than once in driving back. In the 4th month of the 26th year, I came to Peking, and opened a shop for the sale of bows, within the bastion of the Seu-en-woo gate. In the 8th month of the 28th year, I wrote a petition to Keying, which I commissioned a friend of mine, named Wang, to present to him. Whether or not this paper ever reached the minister, I cannot say, for I have never met Wang since then. In the 3rd month of the 29th year, Lo-luy-sze (the Romanist foreigner) sent a servant of his, named Kaou, to Peking, who took up his quarters in a shop, the name of which I cannot recollect, situated upon the Se-ho-yuen canal, outside of the Ching-yang gate. Hearing of his arrival, I visited him, and inquired upon what business he had come. He told me that Lo-luy-sze had sent him to the capital to inquire what progress the representation, which Keying had promised to make of his zeal in arranging English affairs, had made. I thereupon informed him that there was a report that Keying had already noticed the subject to the emperor, and that a Romish church was about to be built in consequence; and I advised him not to move further in the matter, lest he should do harm. Having done this, I wrote a letter to Lo-luy-sze, which I gave to Kaou, and told him to take back. He returned with it forthwith. At that time I had not as yet presented any petition at the residence of Keying, but since then, during the 5th and 7th months of this year, I have addressed him four several times, and carried my letters to his own house, but the door-keeper has conveyed none of these into his hands. On the 21st day of this month, I entered the Seu-en-woo gate with a fifth petition in my hand, when the officers on guard, hearing of it, took me up, and sent me to this office, with both my petition and a copy thereof, which I had intended to keep."

"Having taken the above deposition, I ordered the prisoner to put upon paper the substance of the letter which he gave to the man Kaou to carry back to Lo-luy-sze, and I find that it agrees in the main with his own story. I have therefore to request your Majesty's permission to hand over the prisoner, Ting Kwangming, for trial to the Board of Punishments."—North China Herald, Nov. 2.

The Board of Punishments reports that Le Yuenfa, the rebel chief of Kwang-se, "who has been guilty of the heinous crime of fomenting internal rebellions, attacking walled cities, massacring lawful authorities, and opposing the imperial troops," has arrived at Peking, and has been lodged in close confinement, to await the punishment of death, which his Majesty decrees he shall suffer, in order to assert the dignity of the empire, and "quiet the minds of men."

LEW CHEW ISLANDS.

The visit of H.M. steam-sloop Reynard to the Great Lew Chew promises to have a most favourable result in ameliorating the condition of Dr. Bettelheim, whose missionary labours, for the last four years and a half, have been productive of but little benefit towards the propagation of Christianity in that remote region.

The Reynard carried an official despatch from Lord Palmerston, intimating that the British Government took an interest in Dr. Bettelheim's welfare, and would view with great displeasure any attempt on the part of the Lew-Chewans to expel him from the island. In making this known to the authorities, Capt. Cracroft was ably seconded by the Bishop of Victoria, who was on board the Reynard, and acted as interpreter, which his lordship's knowledge of Chinese enabled him to do without the necessity of Dr. Bettelheim's intervention. An interview with the governor of Napa took place on the 5th of October, when the grievances of which Dr. Bettelheim had too much reason to complain were laid before him. Two of these charges were serious; ill-treatment and violence towards himself, he having been publicly beaten in the market-place of Napa on the 6th of January last, and gross insult to his wife. Eighteen hours were given for a reply, in explanation of the charges. On the 9th, the viceroy and governor of the island arrived at Napa, from Sheudi, the capital; and as this was an occasion when a show of force might be deemed politic, Capt. Cracroft and the Bishop proceeded to the place of meeting, attended by a guard of fifty men, and all the officers of the Reynard in full dress. Their presence, it is more than probable, contributed something towards the satisfactory result which we have the gratification of recording. The viceroy there distinctly stated that Dr. Bettelheim should be very differently treated for the future. The explanation or reply to Dr. Bettelheim's charges was accepted, and has since been forwarded to Hongkong for the consideration of H.M.'s plenipotentiary. The Reynard left the island on the 10th, after a friendly visit from all the chiefs, and an interchange of presents, having made an impression that will not soon be forgotten. The Reynard is the first steam-vessel that has visited that part of the world, and we trust, ere long, to hear of her being ordered to Japan, where doubtless these proceedings will soon be known, and as certainly disapproved of.

Dr. Bettelheim's time has not been altogether thrown away. Though he has not succeeded in making any converts, he has translated the Gospel of St. Luke and the Acts of the Apostles into Low-Chewan, and he is now busy with the rest of the New Testament, which he hopes to complete during the next twelve months. He has also nearly finished, ready for the press, a Japanese dictionary.—North China Herald, Nov. 2.

SINGAPORE.

A supplement to the Singapore Free Press contains the returns of exports and imports for the two last commercial years. The total of imports is Drs. 11,303,837, and of exports Drs. 10,455,521. The place which stands highest on the list of imports is Calcutta, amounting to Drs. 2,846,884, while those from Great Britain are Drs. 2,692,409. The articles are not distinguished in this list, but this large amount of imports from Calcutta is of course chiefly made up by opium. China comes next, being Drs. 1,065,129. In exports the position of these places is changed. China is at the head of the list, the total of merchandize to that country being Drs. 1,808,269, while Great Britain is Drs. 1,200,961, and Calcutta only Drs. 389,777. The total increase of imports of merchandize for the official year 1849-50 over the preceding year is Drs. 1,184,152, treasure having undergone a slight falling off, namely Drs. 250,512. The total exports exhibit a decline as compared with the preceding year equal to Drs. 593,548.

JAPAN.

The New York papers give the following account of the release of several Americans detained as prisoners in Japan:—

"Information having been received through the Dutch Government at Batavia of the detention and imprisonment in Japan of sixteen American shipwrecked seamen, the United States ship-of-war Preble was despatched, in February, 1849, to demand their release. On her way to Japan, the Preble touched at the Loo-Choo Islands,—a kingdom in themselves, yet dependencies of Japan. For gentle dignity of manners, superior advancement in the arts, and general intelligence, the inhabitants of this group are by far the most interesting unenlightened nation in the Pacific Ocean. The Preble is the first American man-of-war that has ever visited them. As the Preble neared the coast of Japan, signal guns were fired from the prominent headlands to give warning to the surrounding country (as it was afterwards ascertained) of the appearance of a strange ship. As she entered the harbour of Nagasaki, the Preble was met by a number of large boats, which ordered her off, and attempted to oppose her further ingress; but by standing steadily in, with a fine breeze, their ranks were soon broken, and a desirable position selected for anchoring. Fleets of boats, crowded with soldiers, shortly afterwards began to arrive, and from that time until the Preble left, they poured in, in one incessant stream, day and night. Each squadron of boats had banners ornamented with distinctive symbols and devices, which were transferred with the troops to their encampments on the elevated shores surrounding the anchorage of the Preble. From these heights were, at intervals, unmasked batteries of heavy artillery, numbering in all upwards of sixty guns, which were trained upon the Preble's decks. It was in the face of this array, and with a cordon of boats drawn around the ship, that negotiations were carried on for the release of American citizens from an ignominious and cruel imprisonment of nearly seventeen months. Against these men the Japanese urged not the slightest charge, except the difficulty they had had in building prisons and cages strong enough to hold them. Yet they were treated with inhuman barbarity, and when first confined were made to trample on the crucifix, being told that it was 'the devil of Japan,' and that if they refused to comply, their lives would pay the forfeit. The demand for their release was at first treated with a well-affected haughty indifference by the Japanese authorities. This subsequently gave place to an evasive diplomacy; but upon being peremptorily told by Capt. Glynn, in language that could not be misunderstood, that they must immediately deliver up the men, or means would be found to compel them, and that the American Government always knew how to recover and protect its citizens when improperly detained or abused by any nation whatever, they quickly changed their tone, and deprecating any anger or excitement on the subject, the lieutenant governor (who had conducted the interview on behalf of the Japanese) promised that they should be sent off to the ship in two days from that time. This was strictly fulfilled."

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

THE last accounts from the Sandwich Islands give interesting evidence of their continued progress. The want of labourers, however, was still a subject of complaint, the native population, which was estimated by Capt. Cook at 400,000, being now not more than 80,000, while a diminution is steadily going on at the rate of about 6 or 7 per cent. per annum. Owing to this circumstance, an Act had just been passed prohibiting the natives from emigrating to California without special permission, to be obtained on showing good cause, "many having gone there and died in great misery." The influx of foreigners was rapidly augmenting, and trade of all kinds was active. The demand for lumber was continuous, and the number of new buildings in course of erection at Honolulu, the capital, was unprecedented. The natives also were beginning to prefer frame-houses to their ordinary thatched huts. Consequent upon the rapid growth of the foreign commerce of the islands, four new ports of entry had been opened—three on the island of Hawaii, and one on the island of Kauai. The establishment of a bank was also contemplated, and the opening of an agency for some English or American fire and life assurance company appears also to be desired. Arrangements had been published for sending articles to the Exposition of 1851, consisting of agricultural produce, native woods and grasses, and specimens of native labour, such as fine mats, kapas, &c. The treaty of commerce and navigation with the United States had been ratified on the 24th of August. The vessels of both countries are to be free, with the exception of the coasting trade, and whalers are to be allowed to land supplies, not including spirituous liquors, to the value of Drs. 200, free of duty. Provision is also made for the surrender of criminals. The treaty is to last for ten years, and then to continue, subject to a year's notice. Among the Acts recently passed by the Legislature, was one to abolish the privilege of paying taxes in produce, the currency of the islands having increased so as to render it unnecessary. The rise in the rate of wages had led to an Act also for increasing the commutation to be paid for the labour of twelve days per annum required to be contributed by every inhabitant for the maintenance of the roads, &c. from 12½ cents to 50 cents for each day. The return of the two young princes with Mr. Judd from their recent visit to England, France, and the United States, had just occurred, and the reception given them in this country seems to have been regarded with great satisfaction. Much reliance was also placed on the good offices of England, in procuring from France a just recognition of the claims of the islands for compensation, arising out of the destructive attack made upon them a year or two back by M. Dillon, the French consul.—Times.

A THIRD RING ROUND THE PLANET SATURN.—Letters received from Boston announce the discovery of a third ring round the planet Saturn,—a phenomenon which has been for some time suspected. This fact was ascertained by the astronomers at the Observatory at Cambridge. It is interior to the two others, and therefore its distance from the body of Saturn must be small.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

In the last number of the Journal Asiatique of Paris, M. Bazin has translated some portions of the Shwuy-hoo-chuen, a Chinese romance of the class we term "historical," one of which,—à propos of the appearance of a disease, which bears some resemblance to the cholera morbus, in the eleventh century,—relates the extraordinary expedient adopted by the emperor to stay its ravages.

"In the spring of the third year Kea-yaou (A.D. 1058), a pestilential disease ravaged the empire, spreading from the Keang-nan to the two capitals. In every department of every province, the reports of the authorities succeeded each other like flakes of snow. It is said that in the eastern capital (Tung-king) and its suburbs, so great was the mortality, that more than one-half of the population and of the troops was swept away by the epidemic. Paou-ching, the governor of Kae-fung-foo, put forth police regulations and prescribed sanitary measures to allay the commotion of the lower classes, and to check the progress of the disease. These precautions, however, and the distribution of medicines, were vain; the contagion, in spite of the resources of art, propagated itself with inconceivable rapidity. The mandarins of the empire resolved to deliberate upon the subject; they assembled in the grand court of the palace, and solicited an audience of the son of heaven, the emperor Jintuang.

"In this august assembly, one of the great ministers, Fan-chung-yen, rose, and thus addressed the emperor: 'Sire, the epidemic is extending throughout all our provinces; the army is rapidly diminishing; the people are dying in multitudes; at every step we encounter the dead and the dying, who are left to perish without succour. In such a state of things, the humble advice of your minister is, that we must control this terrible scourge by means of sacrifices, and call to the relief of the nation the grand master of the doctrine of the Taou-sze. Let us, moreover, offer in all the temples a grand propitiatory sacrifice to all the spirits of heaven, without exception, and your majesty must offer a supplication to the Shang-te (Lord of Heaven). These measures will, I doubt not, deliver us from this great calamity.'

"Jin-tsung, adopting this suggestion, ordered a member of the Han-lin academy to draft an imperial order, which he copied out with his own hand, and calling for some sticks of incense, he charged Hong-sin, the governor of the palace, to be the bearer of this imperial missive. Hong-sin took his departure, with the order and the incense, and mounting his horse, with an escort of thirty men, took the road to Sin-chow, in Keang-se, where he arrived without halting.

"The mandarins of the city having attended him, Hong-sin immediately despatched an officer to the Taou-sze who dwelt in the palace of the Supreme Purity, on the mountain of Dragons and Tigers, to advertize them of his visit. Next day, the mandarins accompanied him to the foot of the mountain, where he saw all the Taou-sze of the palace, who appeared in great numbers, some ringing their little copper bells, or beating their drums; others holding boxes of incense, flowers, or lighted flambeaux; some again bearing banners upon which were painted the forms of genii, and others umbrellas sparkling with gems and pearls. A troop of musicians swelled the train, as they descended in procession from the mountain to receive the imperial message.

"When Hong-sin came opposite the palace of the Supreme Purity, he dismounted, and was saluted by the Taou-sze, who, after compliments, conducted him into the temple of the Three Pure Ones, inviting him to draw forth the imperial missive from its case, and to offer a sacrifice. This being done, Hong-sin demanded of the Venerable Superintendent of the palace where was the master of the doctrine. 'Governor,' he replied, 'that great anchorite, the ancestor of generations, disengaged from all ties (passions), and supremely pure, as he has abjured intercourse with mankind, dwells not here, but has built for himself a cabin of rushes upon the summit of the mountain of Dragons and Tigers, where he cultivates virtue.' 'But the son of heaven summons him to the capital,' returned the governor, 'and I must fulfil my mission.' 'Allow me,' said the venerable one, with a smile, 'to make an observation. The emperor's missive must be deposited upon the altar; without the observance of rigorous forms, neither I nor any of these venerables present dare open the missive. Deign to partake of a collation in our convent, and we will then consider what is to be done.'

"Escorted by the mandarins, Hong-sin followed the Taou-sze into their monastery, where the novices offered him tea, fish, and fruit. When the meal was over, he addressed the chief of the Taou-sze thus: 'Since the master of the doctrine has fixed his abode on the top of the mountain, in a cabin of rushes, why do you not charge some one to invite him down? I wish to have an interview with him; he might open the missive.' 'The grand anchorite,' interposed the Superintendent, 'not only lives upon the top of the mountain, but is endowed with extraordinary faculties; when he pleases, he can bestride a cloud and direct its course. It would be impossible to track his footsteps. As to us, miserable bonzes, we can scarcely gain a sight of him; how, then, can you expect that we should send a messenger to him?' 'What is to be done, then?' inquired Hong-sin. 'A pestilential disease is ravaging our country, and as it is extending far and wide, the emperor desires to avail himself of the prayers and propitiatory sacrifices of the master of the doctrine, in order that the wrath of heaven may be appeased, and the people saved. I am required to execute the will of the emperor: enlighten me with your counsel.' 'Beware,' replied the venerable priest, with some sharpness; 'there are difficulties in the way. If the son of heaven wishes to save his subjects, it is indispensable that your excellency should become a convert to our faith; that you should practise holy abstinences, observe fasts, and perform ablutions; that you should lay aside this gorgeous habit, dispense with your escort, gird the case containing the missive on your loins, burn perfumes on your way, as you climb the mountain on foot, and having gone through the prescribed ceremonies, you will then behold the great master of the doctrine, to whom (having touched the earth with your forehead) you may address your supplication; but if, failing in faith, your courage shall falter, your journey up the mountain will be fruitless—you will not see him.' 'Well,' exclaimed Hong-sin, 'my heart should not know fear, for, to tell the truth, I have fasted all the way from the capital, subsisting upon roots and water. To-morrow, therefore, at break of day, I will ascend the mountain.'

"Next day, accordingly, at the early dawn, the Taou-sze roused Hong-sin, to begin his ablutions, and when they were completed, he was clad in a long hempen tunic, and sandals of straw were put upon his feet. After eating some roots boiled in water, he wrapped the imperial missive in a piece of yellow silk, suspended it in its case from his shoulder, and, bowing himself to the earth, burnt the incense of the son of heaven. The Taou-sze then, in a body, conducted him to the foot of the mountain, and whilst some of them pointed out to him the tracks he was to follow, the venerable Superintendent exhorted him to be firm and resolute.

"Hong-sin, taking leave of the Taou-sze, invoked the Master of Heaven, and began to climb the steep. For some time he traced the tortuous paths of the mountain, which formed an infinite number of zig-zags, seizing sometimes the plants that grew by the way, to which he clung as to a cord, in order to help him up. After a journey of two or three miles, his feet began to swell, and he became so weak that he could not speak. He now began to reflect upon the soft cushions and delicate viands he had left at the palace to come upon this painful expedition, exploring with straw sandals upon his feet the intricate paths of this solitude. 'Ah, wretch that I am!' he said, or tried to say. Nevertheless, he resumed his journey, but had scarcely gone fifty paces before, overcome with fatigue and panting for breath, he sank under the shade of some trees. On a sudden, a whirlwind shook the mountain; the roar of wild beasts was heard, echoing in the air like thunder, and he beheld a tiger bounding towards him, with a white face and fiery eyes. The unhappy governor of the palace, seized with terror, exclaimed, a-ya! and fell flat upon the ground. The tiger, fixing his eyes upon him, scratched the earth on each side, grinded his teeth, uttered a roar or two, and at length, taking a leap down the hill, disappeared. Hong-sin raised his eyes; his teeth chattered, his heart throbbed, his body shivered like the leaves of a tree agitated by the wind, and his limbs trembled like the legs of a cook just come out of a fight in which he had been beaten. Bitter were the complaints he uttered. Taking courage, after some time, he burnt more perfumes, and recommenced the ascent. He had scarcely proceeded fifty paces further, when his heart again sank within him, and he exclaimed, 'The august emperor has, by his sovereign will, sent me to this place; but fear has seized me'—

"Before he had finished, another gust of wind shook the trees, and diffused a filthy vapour in the air. Listening, the terrified governor heard amongst the bushes around him a dull murmur and a kind of rustling sound; on a sudden, a monstrous serpent, as white as snow, glided from the thicket, just as a bucket-rope is evolved from a well. 'Surely, death is my portion now,' exclaimed the horror-struck mandarin, who, in his agony, leaped upon an eminence; but the mighty monster, darting upon the rock, approached him with glaring eyes; and, after performing various gyrations, thrusting its tongue out of its jaws, and covering the face of the trembling governor with its venomous saliva, moved away, and he saw it no more.

"The governor, shuddering with fear, and blushing with shame at his want of resolution, cursed the Taou-sze in his heart, and, resolving to encounter no more such adventures, descended the mountain."

The narrative then relates that the Taou-sze conciliated the governor by showing him their various sacred edifices, amongst which was a singular building bearing the inscription of "Palace of the Subjugated Demons." Hong-sin inquired what this meant, and was informed by the chief bonze that it was the abode of the demons whom the masters of the doctrine in ages past had subdued, and placed under lock and key; that amongst them was the prince of the demons, who had been subjugated in the Tang dynasty, and that, if by any chance he escaped, the empire would suffer grievous calamities. Hong-sin, whose curiosity overpowered his fear, peremptorily commanded the door to be opened, that he might behold the king of the demons. The bonze implored him not to persevere in his demand, and protested that he dared not open this dread abode. Hong-sin reproached him with imposture, and with having himself erected this building, which he pretended to be inhabited by demons. "This is a trick of your detestable art," said he. "I know history; I have read books which are the mirror of truth; and do they say that there are demons incarcerated anywhere? I do not believe that the king of the demons is shut up here; therefore, quick, open the door." The priest could not resist the authority of the governor, and commanded the brazen locks to be broken. Hong-sin and the Taou-sze entered the interior, which was silent and dark. Torches were brought, when nothing appeared but a monument, bearing an inscription, in ancient characters, to this effect: "Hong, whom I shall meet by chance, will open this." The governor, encouraged by this discovery, insisted that the monument should be opened forthwith, and, in spite of the warnings of the chief bonze, the work of demolition commenced. The monument was levelled; its foundations were exposed, under which a slab of green jasper appeared. Hong-sin, disregarding the entreaties of the bonze, ordered this slab to be removed, when a yawning gulf was disclosed, 10,000 chang deep, whence a piercing voice issued, which bore no resemblance to the sounds of mortal organs. Suddenly, a dark vapour arose from this abyss, which ascended half way to the clouds, and fiery sparks, like falling stars, issuing therefrom, illuminated the horizon. All present, priests included, fled with precipitation, and screaming with terror; Hong-sin, more dead than alive, rushed madly from the horrid scene, and, meeting the chief bonze, inquired what beings they were who had thus emerged from the pit. "All I can tell you," replied the terrified bonze, "is, that our great ancestor, the divine instructor, when he transmitted to his disciples his precepts and talismans, said, 'In the interior of this temple are confined the genii who preside over one hundred and eight stars of sinister presage; the king of the demons is amongst them; a monument is erected over his body; remember, that if ever he is suffered to escape, he will persecute all living creatures.' You, O governor, have released him, and now what frightful evils may we not expect!"

Hong-sin was struck with consternation; a cold sweat pervaded his limbs; he hid his face with his hands. Hastily collecting his baggage, followed by his escort, he took the road to the capital. Entering the city of P'en-leang, he learnt that the great master of the doctrine had offered, during seven days and seven nights, sacrifices to the genii of heaven, and that the epidemic had entirely disappeared.

Captain Brooke, of the Mewar Bheel corps, has sent to the Asiatic Society of Bengal some specimens of zinc ore, procured from the mines of Jawar, half-way between Kherwara and Udayapura. These mines, which have been closed since 1812-13, are stated by Col. Tod to have yielded a net revenue to the Rana of £22,000 a year.

Wei Yuen, the author of "The Holy Wars of the Tsing Dynasty," a work in twenty vols., very popular in China, denounces the "doctrines of Jesus" as injurious to the people and hurtful to the state, declaring that "Christianity and opium" are the chief evils which endanger the empire.

The church built at Shanghai, under the direction of the missionaries of the Church Missionary Society, in the western part of the city, has Ye-soo tang, 'Jesus Temple,' written in large characters over the front door, which attract many of the natives to enter. The service is in Chinese.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON.

TUESDAY, February 4, 1851.

FOREMOST in the questions which must engage the attention of Parliament, during the ensuing session, will be those relating to finance and taxation. Wealth has its vexations and embarrassments as well as poverty, and a Chancellor of the Exchequer, who is put to his wit's ends to devise means of supplying a deficiency of revenue, is tormented, when he finds a surplus in his hands, to know what to do with it. The income tax, the tax on windows, the taxes on knowledge, the duty upon malt, and the duty upon tea, are severally marked out for attack, upon public or private grounds; and as a tax, in whatever form, is an obnoxious thing, all that can be said in favour of any tax is, that it is not so bad as another. Soap and carriages are added to the list, and that great financier, Mr. MacGregor, the member for Glasgow, in his manifesto addressed to the electors and non-electors of that city, declares his opinion, "that not only the window, but all assessed taxes, the hop duty, and all the excise taxes, excepting spirits and malt (the latter also as soon as practicable), and all taxes on knowledge, should be abolished." To be sure, all these various claims might be met by the plea, that this nominal surplus is in reality no surplus at all, since it is applicable to the payment of the state debt, and therefore belongs to the public creditor; but there seems to be a general disposition to pooh-pooh this suggestion, and to consider that, as we are not the generation that contracted the debt, we ought not to be called upon to pay it.

As it is plain that a surplus of £2,500,000, if distributed amongst all the imposts we have enumerated, could afford no sensible relief in either, a selection must be made, and, after giving due weight to all that has been or can be alleged against the burthen and inequality of the income tax, the social and sanitary evils attending that on windows, the impediments to the diffusion of useful information created by the duties on paper and advertisements, and the injustice of the malt tax, our conclusion is, that a reduction of the heavy import duty upon tea would be the best object to which the surplus revenue could be directed. To this conclusion we have been led by considering, not merely the relief the reduction would actually afford, but the probability that the impulse given thereby to the consumption of the article would gradually make up the loss, — a circumstance which is a main ingredient in the question of preference, and which can be urged on behalf of neither of the other imposts, except, perhaps, the malt tax.

All the arguments in favour of a reduction of the tea duties are forcibly put in a memorial recently presented to the First Lord of the Treasury by the Glasgow Chamber of Commerce. They state, in the first place, that a Select Committee of the House of Commons, in 1847, recommended a considerable reduction of this duty, as conducive to the comforts of the people, and essential to the extension of our trade with China. They allege that the loss of revenue would be but temporary, and would be replaced in a year or two by the increased consumption of tea, and also of sugar,—an allegation which is warranted by the effects produced by the reduction of the duties on coffee, sugar, and other articles, and even on tea itself; that to a very large portion of the people tea may be considered as one of the necessities of life, and its increased consumption would check the evils arising from the intemperate use of intoxicating stimulants; that tea is almost the only foreign article upon which, under our present liberal system, the import duty has not been reduced, being taxed from 150 to 200 per cent., whilst sugar, coffee, and other articles of consumption, are taxed only from 50 to 100 per cent.; that a liberal reduction of the duty on this commodity would greatly extend the commerce of this country, and especially our direct trade with China, which is now stationary, and would be only an act of justice to that country, the government of which admits British manufactures at a duty of 5 per cent. only.

These various reasons, moral and social, as well as fiscal, make out, in our opinion, an irresistible case, not for an entire remission of the tea-duty, which is not asked, but for a liberal diminution of it. We remember the powerful speech of Mr. Wilson, in the House of Commons, two years back, against the impolicy and injustice of this tax, and in favour of a material reduction of it, and unless place has wrought, as it sometimes does, a total change of opinion, though founded upon statistics, the Glasgow Chamber will have at least one able advocate on the Treasury Bench.

In pressing upon Lord John Russell the policy of reducing this duty as a means of extending our direct trade with China, the Chamber states a fact which stands in strange contrast with the sanguine opinions expressed by some of the witnesses upon whose evidence the Legislature thought it expedient, in 1834, to withdraw this trade from the hands of the East-India Company:—

“Such an extension of trade was naturally expected by British merchants at the conclusion of the war with China; and, although these expectations have not been realized, and the trade with China has for many years retrograded, and is even now stationary, when every other branch of trade is rapidly increasing, there is yet good reason to believe that a liberal reduction of the duty on tea would enable British merchants to purchase much larger quantities of that article in China, for which the Chinese would willingly receive British manufactures in return.”

We well remember the fluent predictions of the late Mr. Rickards, and other opponents of the Company, as to the astonishing expansion which the China trade would receive as soon as it was thrown open. Reduction of duty on tea was not thought of. The apathy of the Company was the sole obstacle to the almost boundless enlargement of this trade, which was to absorb an incalculable supply of British manufactures. Even Mr. Grant, in his celebrated letter on the Charter, in 1833, argued that, “in the case of this trade, as of every other, the presumption is, that the extent of the dealings, and the national benefit resulting from them, will be in proportion to the opening afforded to capital and adventure to embark in the trade;” and he appealed to the success attending the opening of the trade with India as an experiment which neutralized all objections as to the improbability of the extension of the China trade. It now appears, after nearly twenty years’ trial, that “the trade with China has for many years retrograded!”

A CALCUTTA paper has published a list of the officers of the Indian army who have been brought to trial by Court-Martial during the command in chief of Sir Charles Napier, from June, 1849, to December, 1850. It thence appears that, in the comparatively short space of eighteen months, the number of officers so tried is forty-five, of whom no fewer than twenty were sentenced to be cashiered or dismissed, and twenty-two to suffer lesser penalties, the number of acquittals being only three. This is at the rate of nearly three trials, and more than one expulsion, per month. So large a number of trials might be attributed to an undue stringency of discipline, and even a tyrannical exercise of authority, on the part of the head of the army, did not the convictions and the dismissals bear so great a proportion to the number tried, proving that the cause must be found in the state of the army itself. An examination into the nature of the charges, moreover, discovers that, in the majority of the cases, they were not founded upon acts of insubordination, or explosions of ill-regulated temper, but upon moral grounds, in many instances upon conduct “disgraceful to the character of an officer and a gentleman.”

Taking this view of the subject, a very high degree of credit is due to Sir Charles Napier for his vigilance and firmness. It is not reasonable to suppose that any sudden deterioration took place in the Indian army when he assumed the command of it; the presumption, therefore, is, that his predecessors were too lenient towards the failings of the European officers of that force, which has, indeed, been suggested by some of the journals. A tenderness of this kind is very detrimental to the character of any army, but infinitely so to that of the army of India.

It has been often lamented that the peculiar constitution of Indian society offers a bar to those improvements of it which might be expected from a free intercourse between natives and Europeans. Even at the Presidencies, their intercommunication is but superficial; it does not penetrate, on the native side at least, into the interior, so as to knit families together by the ties of social or familiar acquaintance. But in the army, an opportunity is afforded for a more intimate knowledge of each other to the European officers on the one hand, and the native officers and sepoy on the other, which, whilst it tends to strengthen the influence of the former, furnishes the latter with ready means of appreciating the better qualities of the European character. In the same proportion, however, that this facility of intercourse is available for good ends, it may be productive of evil. The natives of India are, by nature and habit, shrewd observers of actions, and example operates upon them in a salutary manner; whatever is commendable they are disposed to imitate; what is the reverse, they are less prone to copy than to despise and shun. When the native soldier discovers that his European officer is profligate, dishonest, or a drunkard, he is tempted to entertain a low opinion of the vaunted morality of Europe. The military branch of the public service of England is justly considered to be pre-eminently one in which a high tone of honourable feeling prevails; a reverential regard for the principle of honour is inculcated on all occasions upon the sepoy; but if many aberrations from that feeling and that principle, on the part of those to whom he is taught to look up as his instructors, give him reason for suspecting that their pretensions to superiority in morals are illusory, his respect, not merely for his officers, but for Europeans generally, must suffer abatement. In one of his early "Remarks" upon a Court-martial, Sir C. Napier adverted to this consequence of misconduct in a European officer of a native corps. "I know," he said, in his reprimand of the offending party, "what the feelings of the men you command would be, namely, those of contempt and disgust towards their officer."

This consideration renders a watchfulness on the part of the Indian military authorities indispensable. In the Queen's army at home, immoral conduct in an officer involves his own interests, and the credit and discipline of his corps; in the native army of India, such conduct superadds a stigma upon the European character in the eyes of a people who are mainly retained in subjection to our sway by their respect for that character, and whom it may influence for good or for evil.

These observations had been written before we had seen the Farewell General Order to the Officers of the Army, issued by Sir C. Napier, which tends strongly to confirm them. It will be observed that the Order refers simply to the subject of officers' debts, which, although "no less injurious to the fair fame of the military profession than discreditable to their regiments and ruinous to themselves," are not made matters of charge against the parties before a Court-martial. Sir Charles acknowledges that "the number of officers who have misconducted themselves, in a manner so derogatory to the character of gentlemen, is not inordinate;" at the same time, he says, "it is so large as to demand repression with a strong hand;" and when he cites the testimony of one commanding officer, that "the numerous cases brought monthly before the Courts of Requests is a disgrace to the army we belong to," and of another, that a certain officer "enjoys champagne tiffins, leaving his servants to drag him before the Court for their just claims," the world will not condemn him for the strong terms in which he stigmatizes such disgraceful conduct. "That I am not exaggerating these matters," he adds, "I could easily prove by publishing such facts to the officers of the two armies as would shock every honest and honourable man, and show how entirely I am authorized in saying that these facts are, to the last degree, dishonourable."

The Order reveals, in a fearless manner, the sources of this evil, and the better part of the army, we doubt not, will concur with public opinion in attaching due weight to the reproofs and warnings of Sir Charles Napier.

An incident deserving some notice is related in our China intelligence. The deposition of a native Christian, arrested at Peking, discloses the fact that a Roman Catholic missionary (probably a Jesuit), a native of Rome, during the war with the English, had assisted the Chinese against our countrymen, and employed, under the late reign, the credit and influence he thereby acquired to promote the interests of his Church in China.

The deponent, Ting-kwang-ming, a native of Shantung province, states that he had been brought up from his youth in the Romanist faith; that, a few years back, he became acquainted with a native of Rome (whose name is hopelessly disguised under the Chinese transcription of Lo-luy-sze), under whose guidance he placed himself; that this person told him he had, whilst residing at Canton, rendered good service to Keying, in "arranging the affairs of the English barbarians," whom, at Shang-hae, he had "more than once driven back;" and that the Commissioner had promised to represent him most favourably to the Emperor, who, it appears, was prevailed upon to allow of the building of a Romish church. Subsequently, however, a hitch seems to have intervened, and the delay induced the Jesuit to employ the services of the deponent, who went to Peking, and presented a memorial to Keying (then in high favour at court), on behalf of his priest; the latter, growing impatient, sent his servant to the capital to urge the matter, but the deponent dissuaded him from moving, and despatched him back to the Jesuit, memorializing Keying himself; in attempting, however, to convey the fifth petition into his hands, poor Ting-kwang-ming was seized, and brought before the commander of the garrison, by whom he was handed over to the Board of Punishments for trial,—upon what charge we are not informed.

Several conclusions may be drawn from this incident: first, that, in spite of the severe restraints of the government, Christianity does continue to make proselytes in China; secondly, that Romish missionaries find an entrance into that country, probably through the instrumentality of the English, whose interests they endeavour to undermine and injure; lastly, that the reigning Emperor is even more averse to the toleration of Christianity than his predecessor, and we should not be surprised to find that, notwithstanding the resolution he displayed in driving back the "red-haired Englishmen," Lo-luy-sze has been ordered to quit the empire.

MISCELLANEOUS.

EAST-INDIA DIRECTION.—Wm. Dent, Esq., has been elected a director of the East-India Company in the room of George Lyall, Esq.

GOVERNORS OF THE AUSTRALIAN COLONIES.—The Queen has been pleased to re-appoint Sir Charles Augustus Fitz Roy, Knt., to be Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief in and over the colony of New South Wales, and to appoint him to be Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief in and over the colonies of Van Diemen's Land, Victoria, and South Australia, and to be Governor-General of all the colonies of Australia, including the colony of Western Australia. Her Majesty has further been pleased to re-appoint Sir William Thomas Denison, Knt., captain in the corps of Royal Engineers, to be Lieutenant-Governor of the colony of Van Diemen's Land, and Sir Henry Edward Fox Young, Knt., to be Lieutenant-Governor of the colony of South Australia; and to appoint Charles Joseph La Trobe, Esq., to be Lieutenant-Governor of the colony of Victoria.—London Gaz., Jan. 28.

THE FIRST PUISNE JUDGESHIP AT THE CAPE OF GOOD HOPE, vacant by the death of Judge Menzies, has been filled up by the appointment of Mr. William Musgrave to that office.—Globe.

THE TEA DUTIES.—The Glasgow Chamber of Commerce has presented a memorial to the First Lord of the Treasury, praying him to advise her Majesty's Government "to sanction a liberal reduction of the import duty on tea."

INDIAN COTTON.—At the annual meeting of the Manchester Commercial Association, on the 20th January, Mr. A. Turner, the president, made some observations upon the operations which private enterprise is at present carrying out in India, along the coast from Tuticorin to Trichindoor, stating, from information received from Mr. David Lees, a member of that body, who was at present engaged in personally superintending the growth of cotton from the New Orleans or Mexican seed, that it can be produced at 2½d. per lb., and, after deducting all charges in its transit to Liverpool from Trichindoor, will only cost 4d. per lb. Samples of this cotton were recently exhibited in Manchester, and declared to be worth 8d. per lb.

AMERICAN CLIPPER SHIPS FOR THE CHINA TRADE.—The Eclipse, a beautiful clipper ship, just built, is now loading in Peck-slip, and is to sail for California and the East Indies. She is another of the fleet of rapid sailers that have, within a recent period, been launched from the New York ship-yards to compete with English vessels for the trade of Oriental ports. Her length is 200 feet, and she registers 1,225 tons. Her arrangements are very complete. The accommodations for her crew, in particular, are excellent, the fore-castle being placed on the main deck, and suitable provision made for lighting, ventilating, &c. The cabins are elegantly finished with satin and zebra woods, relieved with azure and gold. The fine new clipper ship Sea Serpent is about to take her departure for San Francisco and Canton; 1,200 out of the 1,600 tons she is capable of receiving are already engaged. Her cargo will consist principally of goods suited to the San Francisco market. Having arrived there, she will unload and replenish herself with goods likely to meet a ready sale at Canton; and, after having crossed the Pacific, will take in a stock of Chinese merchandize, and sell it at London; at London she will load, for the fourth time, with goods for the American market, and come home, perhaps, at the end of eleven months, with her first cost paid for out of her first trip. There are now about a dozen elegant clipper vessels owned in New York in the Canton and California trade.—New York Journal of Commerce.

ABERDEEN CLIPPERS FOR THE CHINA TRADE.—The public journals have been filled during the past month or six weeks with the feats of the Oriental American ship of 1,060 tons, which, in her last run, carrying a cargo of about 1,100 tons, made the passage from Canton to London in ninety-eight days. At the time of her arrival her voyage was contrasted with that of the Reindeer, an Aberdeen clipper of 328 tons, which sailed from China about the same time, which, with her copper hanging loose about her, and carrying 500 tons of a cargo, was only beaten five days in the passage from Amoy; and also with that of the John Bunyan, another Aberdeen ship, which in the previous spring, when perhaps more favourably situated as regards the monsoons, made the voyage from Shanghai, three days' sail farther from Canton, in ninety-nine days, and which, though registering only 470 tons, brought about 720 tons of cargo. We have just learnt of another voyage made by an Aberdeen-built ship, which at all events equals, if it does not surpass, that of this same celebrated Oriental. The Countess of Seafield, built by an Aberdeen firm, Messrs. A. Duthie and Co., and commanded by Captain Leask, an Aberdeen captain, left Woosung, about 1,000 miles farther up the country than Canton, on the 8th of October last, and arrived in the London Docks on Monday afternoon, the 20th instant, thus making the voyage in 102 days from port to port. The Countess of Seafield, which belongs to our enterprising townsman, Bailie Adamson, registers 520 tons, and brings a cargo of over 700 tons of tea and silk.—Aberdeen Journal.

THE NEW COMPANY FOR STEAM TO INDIA has issued its prospectus, under the title of "Eastern Steam Navigation Company." Plymouth is to be the port of departure, and the lines to be established are, one to India (Ceylon, Madras, and Calcutta), China, and Australia, on the 5th of every month; another from Calcutta to China, calling at Singapore, to enable Indian passengers to proceed to Australia; and another, if desirable, between Aden and Mauritius. The navigation to China is to comprise a regular communication between Shanghai and Hong-Kong, touching, when not interfering with the mails, at intermediate ports; and the average rate of speed of the boats of the company is to be 10½ knots an hour. In connection with the line from England on the 5th of each month, there is to be a passenger route, via Trieste, leaving London about the 10th, and reaching Alexandria by the boats of the Austrian Lloyd's. The capital of the company is to be £1,200,000.

THE NEW STEAM LINE OF THE PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL COMPANY, between Calcutta, Singapore, Hong-Kong, and Shanghai, is to commence about the 1st of May.

STEAMERS BETWEEN LIVERPOOL AND CALCUTTA.—It is said that efforts are being made at Liverpool to establish a new company to run screw steamers from that port to Calcutta. The proposal is to build iron boats for the service of 2,500 or 3,000 tons, with 500-horse power.—Times.

SHIPPING TO AND FROM INDIA.—The annual comparative statement, published by the East-India and China Association, of the number of British ships, with their tonnage, which entered inwards and cleared outwards from and to places within the limits of the East-India Company's Charter, in the years 1849 and 1850, shows that the number of vessels entered inwards at the port of London was 594, of 281,768 tons, in 1849; and 597, of 288,819 tons, in 1850; leaving an increase in favour of the latter period of 3 vessels, with 7,051 tonnage. The increase in Liverpool was 49 vessels, with 28,237 tonnage—the difference between 199 vessels, with 95,516 tonnage, and 248 vessels, with 123,813 tonnage. The gross increase shown is 58 vessels, of 36,314 tons; the total number of vessels entered inwards having been 868, with 406,479 tonnage, in 1849, against 9,626, with 442,793 tonnage, in 1850. The clearances outward, as far as the port of London is concerned, show an increase of 4 vessels, of 15,023 tons—the difference between 580 vessels, with 276,718 tonnage, in 1849, and 584 vessels, with 291,741 tonnage, in 1850. The increase at Liverpool was 28 vessels, with 18,713 tonnage, the clearances in 1849 having been 303 vessels, with 149,224 tonnage, and in 1850, 331 vessels, with 167,937 tonnage. The total increase is 45 vessels, with 40,139 tonnage; the gross numbers being 1,128 vessels, with 522,056 tonnage, for 1849, and 1,173 vessels, with 562,495 tonnage, for 1850.

SIR JAMES BROOKE.—In a little volume, by the Rev. R. C. Coxe, vicar of Newcastle, amongst other extracts from correspondence between the Rajah of Saravak and the author, is the following passage from Sir James, referring to the defeats of the pirates in 1849, which is the best vindication of his necessary severity against these former scourges of the Indian seas:—"Pray keep the 31st July apart for a special observance; for during the last year not a single innocent life has been taken by these pirates, and not a single prahu has fallen into their hands. The substantial good of our victory has been greater than that of many triumphs famous in story."

ENS. JAMES WILLIAM BRYANT, 22ND REGT. BOMBAY N.I. was elected a Fellow of the Linnean Society of London on the 21st ultimo.

THE SHIP "PERSEA" has been engaged for the freight of stores to Calcutta.

BOOKS.

The Cotton and Commerce of India, considered in relation to the Interests of Great Britain, with remarks on Railway Communication in the Bombay Presidency. By JOHN CHAPMAN.—Chapman.

THIS is a comprehensive, practical, careful, and temperate investigation of a subject which has lately been discussed at some length in our columns, namely, the cotton trade of India, in conjunction with the general commerce of that country. As might be expected of a gentleman who has directed his attention with so much industry and talent to the object of Indian railways, this topic occupies a prominent place in the work before us. Mr. Chapman appears to undervalue most of the suggestions which have been made for improving and cheapening the Indian cotton, in comparison with railroads. The want of European agency, the land tenures, the assessment, upon which so much stress is laid by some, are with him matters of comparative indifference. He doubts whether a more intimate connection can be maintained between the agriculture of India (especially that of cotton) and the capital, skill, and science of Europe, by means of the personal supervision of Europeans; he has reason to conclude "that the Indian government are well disposed to obviate any difficulty on the subject of tenures;" and he thinks "it is not from a diminution in the general amount of taxation in India that relief and advancement are to be chiefly expected." He observes: "Taxation in India amounts to so small a sum per head per annum, that the more important inquiry may well seem to be, not why is taxation in India so great, but, being so small, why is India so little able to bear it?" Whatever may be said about rent, he adds: "Cotton is now actually grown and sold at prices which would make it amply profitable to bring it to England, if only it were conveyed by decent means of carriage to the coast." This is the one great evil: "The source of all the difficulties," he believes, "lies in the wretched state of the means of transit."

The general course of Mr. Chapman's argument is as follows:—That the export of cotton from India to England has risen just as the costs of, or impediments to, the transmission of the cotton have been diminished;—that costs and impediments still remain, which are sufficient to account for the paucity of the supply; that, judging from the past, and from the power of growing acceptable cotton which certain parts of India are known to possess, the diminution of those costs and the removal of those impediments would be sufficient vastly to increase the supply;—and lastly, that the increase of the supply would necessarily be attended with the only circumstances by which an improvement of the quality of Indian cotton can be extensively and permanently affected.

In pursuing this course, he examines the production and prices of cotton in India, showing the districts which are, and those which are not, capable of growing cotton fit for English use, the former yielding a produce 2½ times the entire quantity annually consumed by the manufactures of Great Britain. He next inquires into the causes of the increase of the export of cotton from India to England up to a certain period, and of the cessation of increase; the former being, he considers, the reduction of the costs incurred in the operations requisite between the grower in India and the spinner in England, namely, the fall in freights, in exchange, and in expense of carriage; and "the particular difficulty that prevents further increase," he shows to be the deficient means and the cost of carriage; he and takes as proved the following proposition, viz. "that, with a railway, the indigenous cotton of central peninsular India, of its present condition and quality, would have a safe and constant market at Liverpool, which it has not had, and could not have had, while employing the present means of conveyance." He then proceeds to point out the effects in India of a constant market for Indian cotton in England, and of improved means of transit in India. He next treats of the general commerce of Great Britain with India, suggesting, by analogy with other countries, the cause of its inadequate extent, and the remedy, namely, roads and railways. The remainder of the volume is devoted to matters somewhat of a controversial character, namely, a discussion of facts connected with the railway system of Western India, and with the line and proceedings of the Great India Peninsula Railway Company, the formation of which is mainly attributable to the exertions of Mr. Chapman. This subject, which (including the appendix) engrosses upwards of 200 pages,—more than one-half of the work,—though of much interest to parties connected with the railway, is of subordinate importance to the general inquirer.

Altogether the work is much too long, and although few will quarrel with the fullness of its details, the whole subject is treated in a manner too verbose, which we regret, lest this fault, into which Mr. Chapman has been betrayed by the copiousness of his materials, should interfere with a just appreciation of the merits of the work and the ability of the author.

THE COTTON and COMMERCE of INDIA, considered in relation to the Interests of Great Britain; with Remarks on Railway Communication in the Bombay Presidency.

By JOHN CHAPMAN, Founder and late Manager of the Great India Peninsular Railway Company.

"Promises to be one of the most useful treatises that have been furnished on this important subject.... It is distinguished by a close and logical style, coupled with an accuracy of detail which will, in a great measure, render it a textbook."—Times, Jan. 22, 1851.

Mr. Chapman's great practical knowledge and experience of the subjects upon which he treats of has enabled him to collect an amount of information, founded upon facts, such as we believe has never before been laid before the public. The all-important questions of supply, production, and prices of cotton in India, as well as the commercial and financial questions connected with it, are most ably treated."—Morning Chronicle.

"Written by an intelligent, painstaking, and well-informed gentleman.... Nothing can be more correct than his views, so far as they extend, his survey and character of districts, his conclusions as to the supply the earth can yield, and his assertion that the cost of transit is with Indian cotton the first and ruling element of price."—Daily News.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

ADVERTING to my address of the 15th inst., I have now the honour to repeat my fixed resolution to proceed to the ballot on the occurrence of the next vacancy in the Direction, and from the great accession of supporters consequent upon Mr. Dent's election this day, I feel justified in expressing the fullest confidence of success.

A service of nearly 30 years in the East may, I hope, be considered as giving me some claim to your suffrages, and I can assure you it is my earnest desire to devote my best energies to the promotion of your interests and the welfare of our Indian empire.

The zealous services, also, of my late father,—one of your Directors for nearly half a century,—will, I am confident, dispose many of you to look favourably on my pretensions.

With grateful thanks for the encouragement I have already received, and soliciting a continuance of your favours,

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your obliged and faithful servant,

JOHN HARVEY ASTELL.

6, Vigo Street, Regent Street,
Jan. 29, 1851.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

THE election of yesterday has terminated in favour of Mr. Dent,—a result which will perhaps hardly occasion surprise, considering the length of time that gentleman has been in the field. The number of votes, however, recorded in my favour, and the great accession of strength I receive from the support of numerous friends released from previous engagement by Mr. Dent's election, enable me to announce my intention of proceeding to the ballot on the next vacancy that shall occur, with the most perfect confidence of success.

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your very obedient humble servant,

JOHN CARNAC MORRIS.

10, Mansfield Street, Portland Place,
Jan. 30, 1851.

Mr. Dent	1,057
Mr. Morris	682
Mr. Marjoribanks	319

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

IN tendering to you my cordial thanks for the kind support you afforded me yesterday at the ballot, I beg to offer my best acknowledgments to a large body of Proprietors for their encouraging promises of future support.

In the course of my canvass I have found a considerable number of the Proprietors, most favourably disposed towards me, previously pledged to Mr. Astell, and many of my own friends most anxious to support that gentleman as well as myself. I have therefore determined to defer making a further appeal to the ballot until the second vacancy that may occur from this time, when it is my fixed resolution to do so, and when I can confidently expect, through your continued kindness, to attain the object of my ambition.

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your very faithful and obliged servant,

DUDLEY COUTTS MARJORIBANKS.

4, Upper Grosvenor Street,
Jan. 30, 1851.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

AS the election of Mr. Dent this day to the vacant seat in the Court of Directors abridges the period at the expiration of which I shall submit my pretensions to the test of the ballot, I take the liberty of thankfully acknowledging the increasing encouragement I receive, and of stating again my determination to persevere in earnestly soliciting the continuance of your support.

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your obliged and obedient servant,

FREDERIC MILLETT.

Woodhill, Ripley, Surrey,
Jan. 29, 1851.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

THE election of Mr. Dent having released a considerable number of my friends from their engagements, I shall, with the addition of their kindly-promised support, look forward to a seat in the East-India Direction at no very distant period, and I again venture to assure you that I shall continue every exertion to enable me to proceed to the ballot.

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your faithful servant,

GEORGE FORBES.

7, Hyde Park Gardens,
Jan. 30, 1851.

A CLERGYMAN, residing on his benefice, with his wife and daughters, in a healthy village, about two hours and a half from London, will undertake the charge of and educate TWO or THREE BOYS or GIRLS, during the absence of their parents in India.
Address, post-paid, Rev. A. B., care of Messrs. ALLEN and Co., 7, Leadenhall Street, London.

TO PARENTS RESIDING IN OR GOING TO INDIA.

A LADY, the wife of a beneficed Clergyman, residing in a very healthy rural locality, is anxious to receive into her family ONE LITTLE GIRL, to educate with her own two children, and to share equally with them the advantages of a good governess, under her own immediate superintendence. The highest references will be given.
TWO SISTERS might not be objected to.

Address, A. B., 26, Brock Street, Bath.

AMANEUSIS.—MANUSCRIPTS carefully, neatly, and expeditiously transcribed for the PRESS by a gentleman of experience in literary matters. CORRESPONDENCE, Circular-letters, or other description of COMMERCIAL WRITING, undertaken. Unexceptionable references will be given.

Address, E. H. M., 3, Vincent Place, Kingsland Road.

HAILEYBURY COLLEGE.—A Married Clergyman, M.A. of Oxford, who has long prepared for the preliminary examination with marked success, will have vacancies after Christmas for pupils above 13 and under 17 years of age. His system of instruction ensures the most rapid progress. The judicious course of study required by the H.E.I.C. of candidates for Haileybury is equally desirable for general students, but in case of such applicants, the recommendation of a Director or Member of Parliament is required.

Address Rev. H. M. A., Messrs. W. H. Allen & Co., 7, Leadenhall Street.

BECKWITH and SON, GUN-MAKERS to the Hon. East-India Company, 58, SKINNER STREET, SNOW HILL, LONDON.
The excellent shooting of Beckwith's Rifles is established by upwards of fifty years' experience. B. and Son being manufacturers, they are enabled to offer Double-Barrel Rifles, suitable for the Colonies, at very low prices, and warranted to shoot well. Double and Single-Barrel Fowling-pieces, Pistols, &c., of all descriptions.

THE NEW TOOTH-PICK TOOTH-BRUSH, thoroughly cleansing between the teeth when used up and down, and polishing the surface when used crossways, the hair warranted never to come out; in four strengths—viz. No. 1, hard; No. 2, less hard; No. 3, medium; No. 4, soft. The double anti-pressure nail-brush, which does not divide the quick from the nails. The triple hair-brush, which thoroughly searches and cleanses the hair in one-fourth part of the time of any other method, and acts as both comb and brush combined. The medium shaving-brush, being a selection of the strongest badgers' hair, so well secured in the socket as never to come loose. And, though last not least, the newly-invented "Renovator" clothes-brush, which makes an old coat look like a new one, and a new coat to look new double the usual time. Invented and made only by ROSS and SONS.

THE ATRAPILATORY, or LIQUID HAIR DYE.—The only dye that really answers for all colours, and does not require re-doing but as the hair grows, as it never fades or acquires that unnatural red or purple tint common to all other dyes. ROSS and SONS can, with the greatest confidence, recommend the above DYE as infallible; and ladies and gentlemen requiring it are requested, if convenient, to have it done the first time at their establishment, which will enable them to use it afterwards themselves, without the chance of failure. They think it necessary to add, that, by attending strictly to the instructions given with the dye, numerous parties have succeeded equally well without coming to them.

BOTANIC WATER and BEARS' GREASE.—When the hair is becoming thin, and falling off, the only effectual remedy, besides shaving the head, is the use of the two above-named articles, applied alternately—the botanic water to cleanse the roots from scurf, and as a stimulant, and the bears' grease as a nourisher. If any further evidence was required of the virtues of bears' grease for renovating and preserving the hair, Mr. Catlin's account of the quantity used, and the length of hair obtained, by some of the North-American Indians, would be a sufficient answer.—ROSS and SONS, who first introduced the use of bears' grease in this country, and who fat and kill the animals, recommend the public to purchase none other but with their names and address printed on the pot, or the chances are, their obtaining a spurious article.

ROSS and SONS, 119 and 120, Bishopsgate Street, London.

VARICOSE VEINS, WEAKNESS, FRACTURES, SPRAINS, &c.

HUXLEY'S SURGICAL CAOUTCHOUC ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE-CAPS, &c., are now daily patronized by all the leading members of the profession. Their superiority over every other fabric for artificial support is admitted by all who inspect them. They afford an equal, comforting, and permanent pressure on every portion of the limb, and are drawn on with the facility of an ordinary stocking. H. and Co. guarantee a comfort and support hitherto unknown in any other form of bandage. It is well known that all kinds of Surgical Stockings lately used have a tendency to impede the free and healthy action of the muscles, thereby producing relaxation and great diminution of the limb. Only to be obtained at HUXLEY'S Parisian Shirt Warehouse, 3, Vere Street, Cavendish Square.

KIDSTON'S MECHANICAL LEECH.

WM. KIDSTON and Co., 18, Bishopsgate Street Without, London, in directing the attention of the medical profession to their newly-invented instrument, termed "Kidston's Mechanical Leech," think it would be superfluous and presumptuous to make any comment in its behalf, further than drawing their attention to the testimonials in its favour, published in the "Lancet" of September 26, and in the Pharmaceutical Journal for October.

Full instructions for use will accompany the instruments.

Price per set of instruments,—i.e. three "Leeches," or Vacuum Glasses, with Puncturing Instrument, electro plated, in neat morocco case, complete,—£2. 5s.

CEYLON.—THE COFFEE ESTATE called NILLOO-MALLEY, situate in the Kallebokka Valley, in the Central Province, containing 508 acres, of which 196 acres planted and in full bearing, and 312 reserved forest land. Also, Six Sixteenths of the adjoining Estate, called DEYANELLA, containing 448 acres, of which 206 planted and in full bearing, and 243 reserved forest land. Will be DISPOSED OF by PUBLIC AUCTION in CEYLON, in MARCH next.

For particulars, apply to Mr. G. H. DUNDAS, on the Estates; or to Mr. CLAUD HAMILTON and Mr. EDWARD HARDING, at Messrs. THACKER and Co., 29, Great St. Helen's.

CHEAP, LIGHT, AND DURABLE ROOFING.

CROGGON'S PATENT ASPHALTE ROOFING FELT has been extensively used and pronounced efficient, and particularly applicable for warm climates.

1st. It is a non-conductor.
2nd. It is portable, being packed in rolls, and not liable to damage in carriage.

3rd. It effects a saving of half the timber usually required.

4th. It can be easily applied by any unpractised person.

5th. From its lightness, weighing only about 42 lb. to the square of 100 feet, the cost of carriage is small.

INDEROUS FELT, for damp walls and for damp floors, under carpets and floor-cloths.

Price ONE PENNY PER SQUARE FOOT.

CROGGON and Co.'s PATENT FELTED SHEATHING, for covering Ships' Bottoms, &c., and

DRY HAIR FELT, for covering Steam-boilers, Pipes, &c.; preventing the radiation of Heat, and saving 25 per cent. of Fuel.

TO LATE RESIDENTS IN INDIA.—

TRUE MADRAS CURRY, and MULLIGATAWNEY PASTE and CHUTNIES.—Messrs. BARRIE and Co., Vepery, Madras, to enable their old correspondents returning from India to continue the use of the celebrated Condiments, have made arrangements to forward regular supplies of the above, packed in glass jars for family use, at 1s. 9d. and upwards, which may be had of CROGGON and Co., and BLACKWELL, Purveyors to Her Majesty, 21, Soho Square; FORTNUM, MASON, and Co., Piccadilly; and of the principal Sauce Vendors throughout the kingdom. Each bottle is labelled, and BARRIE and Co., Madras, stamped on the glass.

THE BEST INDIAN CURRY POWDER, UNEQUALLED FOR GENUINE FLAVOUR.

In 1 lb. Bottles, 3s. 6d.; ½ lb., 2s. 3d.; and ¼ lb., 1s. 6d.; or 7 lbs. for 21s.

INDIAN CURRY SAUCE, of superior quality.—This novel and piquant Sauce, now introduced to the English public for the first time, is peculiarly adapted for Steaks, Chops, Game, Fish, Cold Meats, Hash, &c. The addition of a little of this Sauce, in cases where a curry cannot be procured, will prove to connoisseurs a valuable accompaniment.

DELHI CHUTNEE, TAPANIEN SAUCE, and all other Condiments, from Calcutta direct.

PAYNE and Co.'s ROYAL POLYTECHNIC TEA and FOREIGN ESTABLISHMENT, 324, 326, and 328, REGENT STREET.

APPOINTMENTS TO INDIA and the COLONIES.—

Cadets, Assistant-Surgeons, and others appointed to India. Officers joining their Regiments, and all those who have or who are expecting Appointments to India, China, or to any other of the Colonies, may obtain Detailed Lists of the necessary Outfit for every appointment, full particulars of the Overland Route to India, Rates of Passage-Money, Allowance of Baggage, &c., on application to Messrs. THRESHER and GLENNY, East-India and General Outfitters, 152, Strand, London. The only house in the kingdom where THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE WAISTCOAT can be procured.

EMIGRATION and COLONIZATION.

IMMIGRATION being much required in AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, &c., and as the supposed expense of an OUTFIT often prevents individuals emigrating, S. W. SILVER and Co., CLOTHIERS, OUTFITTERS, and CONTRACTORS (having a large interest to maintain in those Colonies), have been advised to make known that they can supply a comfortable OUTFIT, including Bedding, for MALE or FEMALE Emigrants, from Four Pounds (net) upwards, or less (Two Pounds if needful), and for Children in proportion, at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN (opposite the London Tavern), where lists will be given on application.

S. W. S. & Co., being the makers of nearly every article in all the Outfits they supply, and as one of their objects is to promote EMIGRATION, they neither receive from Agents, or pay the too usual commission to any person introducing Passengers to be fitted out, so that the Passage and Outfit may be procured at the least possible expense; but they will, on application, advise Passengers how to obtain the most economic passage to the Colonies. They have a Representative in every Australian Colony, to whom they ship Clothing monthly; thus they would forward small parcels free of expense.

NAVAL and MILITARY OFFICERS, MIDSHIPMEN, CADETS, CIVILIANS, LADIES, &c., are outfitted as heretofore, at the CARIN-PASSENGER OUTFITTING Warehouse, Nos. 65 and 67, CORNHILL (the Emigration Outfitting being exclusively at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN), LONDON, and each branch at ST. GEORGE'S CRESCENT, LIVERPOOL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS, A CERTAIN CURE FOR

DROPSY.—Extract of a letter from Mrs. Leedham, of Leamington, dated Oct. 15, 1850:—"To Professor Holloway. Sir,—It is with gratitude that I write to inform you of the wonderful cure effected on myself by taking your Pills for a severe case of dropsy. The disease appeared about five years since, and notwithstanding the various remedies I tried, and the different medical men I consulted, all seemed unable to check its progress; at last I was so much swollen that I could scarcely walk. At this crisis I commenced taking your invaluable Pills, and by their means, and strict attention to your printed directions, I am now perfectly cured."

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

Annual Premium for assuring 1,000 rupees:—

CIVIL.			MILITARY AND NAVAL.
Age.	With Profits.	Without Profits.	Age.	With Profits.	Without Profits.
20	Rs. 33	Rs. 31	20	Rs. 38	Rs. 35
30	38	35	30	44	41
40	49	45	40	53	49
60	82	77	60	84	79

All holders of Policies in India on the Profit scale, who may have paid five annual premiums, will be entitled, at the expiration of the fifth year, to a year's profit, calculated on the average of the preceding five years; such profit to be paid in cash, or to go in diminution of the future premiums payable, or to be added to the sum assured by the policy, at the option of the holder, after the calculation of the profits shall have been made in London.

After the expiration of 1851, the profits will be declared annually, and the payers of five complete annual premiums be regularly entitled to a participation therein, with a like option as to the mode of application.

Parties assured in India for Life shall, on their return to England for a permanency, and on the first half-yearly premium becoming due, be entitled to come upon the English rates of premium, and be placed under the rules and conditions of the Society there obtaining.

All parties assured for Life, or for terms other than for Life, whatever the number of payments, or the permanency or otherwise of their residence in Europe, shall, after completing a full year from the date of their quitting India, and on the first half-yearly premium thereafter becoming due, be entitled to a reduction of their premium to the English rates, such reduced rates being continued during their further residence in Europe.

Notices of Assignments of Policies will be duly registered at the Office of the Secretaries.

The Society also grants ENDOWMENTS and DEFERRED ANNUITIES for India, the Tables for which, with full information, may be had at the Office of the Family Endowment Society, No. 12, Chatham Place; or at the Office of the Secretaries in Calcutta, Messrs. GORDON, STUART, and Co.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 9th of May, 1849, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums. This will be found a liberal reduction if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premiums.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year

136, LEADENHALL STREET.

We have taken into partnership Mr. JAMES CUNDY, late of the Madras Army.

In thus having secured the services of a gentleman who, by long residence in India, has gained considerable practical knowledge, we feel that we have best consulted the interests of our old friends, and, we hope, show good reason for an accession of new.

On personal application at our office, or on inquiry by letter, every information and assistance will be given to parties arriving from or intending to embark for India, China, and the Colonies, and constituents in England will have prompt attention paid to their wishes, and will find in the Reading-room the latest newspapers, as well as every information they may require on all topics relating to India.

Detailed Estimates of Outfits for Writers, Cadets, and Assistant-Surgeons have been prepared with much care, showing the comparative expense between a journey overland, eid Egypt, and a voyage by the long sea route.

Drafts and Letters of Credit on Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, and China, in large or small sums, are also granted at this Agency.

JAMES BARBER and Co.

EAST - INDIA UNITED SERVICE AGENCY,

53, CHARING CROSS, and 25, SPRING GARDENS.

MAJOR R. D. WHITE (twenty-nine years in the Bengal Army) will be happy to receive gentlemen connected with India and the Colonies, or attend to their written communications.

Passages secured by Sea or overland; Houses or Apartments engaged; Regimental Messes; Wines and Stores; Outfits, &c., supplied; and every description of Agency business transacted.

No charge for subscription to the Agency or Rooms, but every information furnished.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE interview between the Viceroy of British India and the Great King of Cashmere, is the most noticeable amongst the few events announced by the present mail. The meeting took place on the 26th December, having been delayed for two days by a transient indisposition of the Marquess of Dalhousie. The gorgeous spectacle and its incidents are minutely recorded by the "Special Commissioner" despatched to the scene by the Lahore Chronicle, to whose narrative we refer our readers, lest we should mar its effect by an attempt to epitomise it.

The movements of the late Commander-in-Chief still fix the attention of the Indian journalists. He reached Sukkur on the 3rd January, and was received by the brigadier, his staff, and the officers of the station. He accepted an invitation to a dinner, where he is said to have spoken "readily, touchingly, and to the point." Meer Ali Moorad, the Khan of Khyrpore, who came to see his old friend, was present at the dinner, and the next day Sir Charles crossed the river on a visit to the Meer. He reached Hyderabad on the 7th, Kurrachee on the 12th, and was expected on the 17th at Bombay, where he was to be a guest of the Governor until the departure of the steamer on the 3rd February. "A public entertainment, in a sense of the phrase that would imply the Government or its immediate connections offering the late Commander-in-Chief that mark of respect," the Bombay Telegraph says, "is out of the question, owing to circumstances not necessary to mention, as they might revive a hostile feeling at a moment when a quite contrary sentiment ought to prevail: but we are not going to part with the veteran hero without offering him a parting tribute;" and it announces that a banquet, similar to the one offered to Sir H. Dundas, is to be given in honour of Sir Charles by the members of the Byculia Club. Even the Bombay Times acknowledges that public opinion is unanimous in his favour as a soldier, though opposed to him as a politician.

A letter from Ferozepore, published in the Delhi Gazette, says:—"Sir Charles Napier, when leaving, won good opinions from all: his few parting words, as he passed each regiment, were most kind; he showed himself interested in their welfare, and expressed and evidently felt regret at leaving. He said publicly—'in fact I am obliged to go.'"

The last important act of the ex-Commander-in-Chief was the issuing of the following "Circular," signed by the Adjutant-General, dated Simla, 15th December:—

"SIR,—With reference to General Orders by the Commander-in-Chief of this date, I am directed by his Excellency to request you will have the goodness to bring to the notice, for the information of his successor, General Sir William M. Gomm, K.C.B., any cases which may be brought before the European Court of Requests in the district under your command, which may in your judgment be indicative of laxity of conduct on the part of those concerned, in view to the same being known and recorded in this department, it being obviously highly desirable that the few officers (whose looseness in regard to their pecuniary affairs and engagements tends to bring discredit on the service to which they belong) should be debarred from partaking of those rewards of staff or detached employ, which ought only to be bestowed upon such as pursue a very opposite line of conduct.

"I am further, by his Excellency's desire, to request that any cases of high play or gaming which may come under your observation, may be also reported to me, and I am commanded to impress upon you the necessity of checking, to the utmost extent of your power, an indulgence in those most pernicious and debasing practices, fraught, as they invariably are, with embarrassments and pecuniary difficulties, resulting too frequently in dishonourable and evasive endeavours to escape from their evil effects, instances of which have only very recently been brought to Sir Charles Napier's knowledge.

"I am permitted to add, that, in my capacity of adjutant-general of this army, it will be my duty, and a duty I will sedulously attend to, without respect of persons, to bring to the marked notice of the Commander-in-Chief, all reports which may be made to me, of the misbehaviour of officers of the description above adverted to, and insure to the utmost degree practicable that jealous and watchful rectitude of act and honourable bearing on the part of officers of this presidency, the absence of which, in some instances, so greatly tends to lower and depreciate the European character in India.

"In conclusion, I am ordered to instruct you to publish this despatch in your division or district orders, for the due information and guidance of all whom its contents may concern."

The publication of this circular has been treated as an unwarrantable liberty on the part of Sir Charles Napier, who, it is said, "affects to map out the course of action for his successor." It is urged that the proper course would have been for the late head of the army to address himself privately to Sir William Gomm on the subject.

The affairs of the Nizam seem to be approaching a crisis. Rumours of an appropriation of territory, in discharge of the debt due to the Government of India, which the Nizam either cannot or will not pay, are said to be prevalent as well in Upper as in Lower India. A Bombay paper pretends that instructions have been despatched by Lord Dalhousie to General Fraser, the resident, to appropriate so much of that Prince's territory as will suffice to clear off, by its revenues, the debt which he owes the Company, as well as pay the contingent; and that, "in case the Nizam should manifest to General Fraser any wish to be relieved from the troubles always attendant upon crowned heads, the resident is to listen with complacency, and to transmit his Highness's wishes to the Governor-General." Meanwhile the necessity for interference is daily becoming more essential, not merely to the well-being of the country, but even to the very existence of the Nizam's government, the financial resources of which are daily diminishing, through the successful opposition of refractory Talookdars. The Nawab of Ellichpore, not content with defeating his master's troops, has seized four or five villages not belonging to the Ellichpore Talooka. The valley of Berar, part of this territory, is the finest cotton district in India; and the Nizam is not likely to offer any opposition to the surrender of a province from which he is himself unable to derive any benefit. Sir George Berkeley, on his visit to Hyderabad, had declined paying a visit to the Prince, who in the spirit of folly which characterizes him, insisted on the Lieutenant-General and all his suite taking off their boots and spurs, and approaching him in their stockings!

From another little kingdom, Oude, we have the following intelligence, which describes a new military punishment, the invention of the King:—

"The King's body-guard, consisting of 300 troopers and the same number of syces, mutinied a few days ago for their pay. The King sent for the native officers at eleven o'clock at night, and had them soused in the tank, and then put them in confinement. They have since been paid nine months and fourteen days' arrears. The troopers would not remain under the command of the Eunuch Colonel Named Uksoon-ood-Dowlah, and have been dismissed."

The dispute with the Kookees, on the north-eastern frontier, was in a train of settlement. Five of the hostile chiefs had come in, and would give hostages to keep the peace towards all persons within the British territories. We also hear from the same quarter that it is in contemplation to form a Government experimental cotton-plantation in Upper Assam, about sixty miles beyond Debrooghur, where the land is very fine, and well adapted to this cultivation; but there is a great want of labourers.

From the opposite frontier, we are informed that the Kohat hill tribes are to be bribed into good behaviour. According to the Bombay Telegraph, the Government in the north-west provinces has adopted the policy of "taking the hill tribes in the vicinity of Kohat into their pay, and thus converting a nest of active, watchful, and unscrupulous assailants into valuable allies, or, at the very least, into passive neighbours."

The operations for the extension of river irrigation in the Punjab were proceeding apace. The principal canal for watering the Baree Doab will leave the Ravee some miles from Shahpore, following the line of highest level right through the centre of the Doab, and will rejoin the river about sixty miles above Mooltan, a little above its junction with the Chenab. Two branches will flow off from the main trunk to the south, both limited by the Sutlej, one watering the country in the direction of Sobraon, the other in that of Kusoor; one branch to the north irrigates the land around Lahore, and so along to the southward of the Ravee between the river and the main canal. The length of the trunk and its branches is no less than 450 miles, and it will serve the purposes both of navigation and irrigation. The work will cost, it is believed, half a million sterling: it will irrigate about 545,000 acres, at present in a state of complete sterility. It will cost for its maintenance about 20,000*l.* a year, and yield a free return of 120,000*l.*, or twenty-four per cent., on outlay after meeting all charges,—thus repaying the cost within five years, and leaving us a clear increase of 120,000*l.* on our revenue from this single department.

The affairs of the North-Western Bank continue to attract much attention. "The concern," observes the Englishman, "is a small one, not of much importance to any except the unfortunate shareholders, who, it is expected, will lose the greater part of their capital; but it discloses the unsoundness of the system of joint-stock banking in this country, and must lead to the reform or winding up of others. At present, the disclosures as to the North-Western are of the usual kind—false accounts rendered, false profits divided, and the public swindled for the benefit of a few large stockholders. There is more to come out yet."

An Act has passed, to remedy abuses of this kind, entitled "An Act for the Regulation of Registered Joint-Stock Companies," which lays down wholesome rules to prevent mismanagement, and affords a remedy in case of its occurrence; but it is not compulsory. We have given insertion to this law in another page.

The trial of the contractor, Jotee Pershaud, had been put off until the 14th January. The Delhi Gazette says:—

"A statement has been going the round of the press to the effect, that Mr. Brown, the sessions judge of Agra, had upset the decision of Mr. Martin Gubbins, which declared forfeit the first recognisances of Jotee Pershaud. There is not a word of truth in the story. On the contrary, Mr. Brown has disallowed the grounds of appeal, and referred the case back again to the magistrate, intimating that when the latter issues his order for the recovery of the sum (Rs. 20,000), the robakary shall contain his detailed reasons for disallowing the defendant's objections. Nor is there a whit more of foundation for the assertion, that an attachment was issued against the press at Meerut, on account of the bail given by Mr. Lang. The magistrate of Agra wrote two letters to the magistrate of Meerut. The first requested that property to the value of Rs. 2,040 might be seized, without specifying any particulars, and the second contained a request, that the press might, on no account, be touched, even though the full amount could not otherwise be levied. The efforts of Mr. Lang to incur the honour of martyrdom were not quite successful, but along with his client he suffers in fiction, and endures undeserved woes. When his breeches were captured at Agra, the police acted under written orders not to take anything that might inconvenience him or prevent him going about as usual. Jotee wanted to pay the money for him, but no, he would be a victim. It was pleasant, and he liked it. Application has been made to the Supreme Court at Calcutta to estreat the second recognisances, and pending its decision nothing will be done in the way of enforcing payment of the first bail-bonds."

The Hurkaru says—"An action is to be brought in the Supreme Court here to test the effect of the new Magistrates' Protection Act in screening Mr. Martin Gubbins from the proper consequences of his illegal seizure of Mr. Lang's property; and if, as is possible, the Court decides in favour of the magistrate, the matter is to be carried before the Privy Council."

A commission has been appointed to make the most complete investigation into the whole organization of the Commissariat.

The Hindus at Calcutta had at length got up their long-threatened memorial against the Act passed in April last for abolishing the forfeiture of rights and inheritance by persons changing their religion. It is a long and well-written document, probably from the pen of an European.

The Committee of the Union Bank in Liquidation has declared a fourth dividend of 10 per cent. on balances, but it complains that the money comes slowly in, and that there is not much reason to hope for any improvement in this respect.

A draft of an Act "for Relief of certain Sufferers by the insolvency of Sir Thomas Turton" has appeared in the Gazette. It makes over to Government the estates now lying, and which may hereafter lie, unclaimed for fifteen years, in the hands of the Administrator-General, Government undertaking to pay the established claims of the sufferers recognized by the schedules of the local commissioners who investigated the subject.

A fatality seems to attend the progress of the Bengal railway. After fourteen months lost in deliberation about a matter in reference to which no doubt appeared to exist, the Act for enabling them to obtain ground became law on the 20th of December; when six weeks of the cold season had been lost, the commissioner is said to find his powers not sufficient, and that every obstruction that can be resorted to will be thrown in his way by some rich natives near Serampore the moment he begins to act. It is said, moreover, that in the case of the demise of a shareholder, the company will refuse to transfer his stock to his heirs unless the will has been proved in the Prerogative Court, Canterbury. Meanwhile Major Kennedy, the consulting railway engineer to the Bengal Government, has three lines of railways under his consideration—the first, through Pandooah and Burdwan, direct to Mirzapore; the second through Pandooah to Burdwan, and then to Rajmahal; and the third through Pandooah and the coal districts to Rajmahal.

The contract for the Bombay railway has been concluded on what appear very favourable terms for the shareholders. The Bombay Times states,—

"The offers of Messrs. Favel and O'Fowler have been accepted for the construction of the railway from Bombay to Tannah, at the rate of 3,000*l.* per mile, or 53,000*l.* in all for earth-work alone: chairs, rails, &c., with other matters, will, it is stated, bring up the charge to 7,000*l.* per mile in all, not including of course the Sion embankment or the terminal. The Gazette informs us that Mr. Balston's offer was 65,000*l.*, Mr. Jackson's 60,000*l.*, and that the engineer's estimate was 67,000*l.*; the successful competitor is thus 14,000*l.* under this, and 7,000*l.* below his nearest rival. This is good news for the railway interests of India at large. The broad gauge is said to have been determined on for our Indian railways—on the same principle, probably, that 86 lbs. rails were selected, after the public voice, concurred in by the local authorities and board, and all the engineers, had declared unanimously in favour of the lightest kind of rails, and the cheapest mode of construction that could be obtained."

Mr. West's survey of the line for the railway from Baroda to the sea has been published,—a distance of forty-two miles. The expense for a single line of rails is estimated at 3,000*l.* a mile, or 160,000*l.* in all; this includes a pier estimated at 20,000*l.* and 21,000*l.* for working stock. The present traffic along the line is estimated at 47,000 tons, but it is believed that this would rise to 60,000 were the railway once in operation. The total income derivable is set down at 34,000*l.*, of which the working charges will absorb 20,000*l.*; leaving 14,000*l.* for dividends, or close on ten per cent. The whole preliminary charges are defrayed by the Guicowar, who gives the ground free of expense, and takes a large allowance of the stock.

From Ceylon we have no intelligence of any moment, except the names of six public servants brought prominently forward in connection with certain malpractices.

A supplement to the overland Colombo Observer contains a letter from Singapore, dated 6th January, of which the following is an extract:—

"I have it in my power to give you later information of the search which is being prosecuted for the recovery of Sir J. Franklin and his party, than even the Admiralty itself is yet possessed of. H.M.'s surveying ship Herald arrived here from the Arctic regions, via the Sandwich Islands and Hong Kong, during the last week, and she has the latest accounts from the far north. Near the extreme station of the Russian Fur Company, they learned from the natives that a party of white men had been encamped three or four hundred miles inland; that the Russians had made an attempt to supply them with provisions and necessaries, but that the natives, who are at enmity with the Russians, had frustrated all attempts. No communication could be opened with the spot where they were said to be, as a hostile tribe intervened. From the Esquimaux they had this vague story very satisfactorily confirmed, with the addition that the whites and natives having quarrelled, the former had been murdered. As to the possibility of these unfortunates being Sir J. F.'s party, I leave you and your readers to judge. Little hopes can now be entertained of finding them alive, as their provisions must have been expended one year, and their fuel, which is as necessary, must have all been burned out nearly two years since."

Sir James Brooke was expected in Singapore, on his route to Europe for the benefit of his health.

IRREGULAR ARTILLERY IN THE PUNJAB.

We have now a complete irregular force in the Punjab,—infantry, cavalry, and artillery; an experiment on a larger scale than Government have hitherto attempted; a rather large division of troops, as regular in point of strength, equipment, and drill, as any other division of the army (or doubtless it soon will be), only irregularly officered. Government have had every reasonable motive for making this experiment, and that it will materially assist in "settling" this newly-acquired portion of our territories, no person acquainted with the subject is disposed to doubt.

But it is a subject for speculation, how this is likely to affect the regular army at no very distant period; a subject, however, we do not propose entering upon at this moment. We wish merely to say a few words regarding the last addition to this Punjab irregular force,—the three batteries of artillery. We believe that these three appointments (we of course do not allude to the officers selected) are in no way a matter of gratulation among our artillery friends, much as they are withheld sharing the advantages enjoyed by their brethren in the other arms of the service. In the first place, since they have been almost wholly debarred extraneous employment, on account of the insufficiency of officers for the present number of troops and batteries, to increase the number of batteries, without adding to the size of the regiment, is something very like a practical contradiction by Government of their own statement.

Irregular artillery, again, conveys to us the notion somewhat of underdone cookery, which we would rather have left alone altogether than have only half done. Artillery, to be of any use, should be thoroughly efficient in every particular; the more it declines from this, the more certainly it will not only be an incumbrance, but possibly destructive to the force with which it is working. Irregular batteries! What general would ever ask for such a thing? "To them one would apply the besom, try to sweep them with some rapidity into the dust-bin, and well out of one's road, we should rather say."

However, irregular batteries of artillery, it appears, there are to be.—three of them,—equipped with gear and establishments similar to the present horse field batteries, with one officer of artillery attached to each; so that, if any one out of a large number of probable contingences should happen to deprive a battery of its head, a very useful sort of appendage to a force it will prove! And this for the purpose of saving a few hundred rupees,—literally no more. But we have heard it said that, in the part of the country where these batteries are to be stationed, they are never likely to be opposed to artillery: the moral effect of them is all that is desired. Why such an expensive sham, then, we would ask? and why in particular 9-pounders? Add to their utility, we should say; encourage them in the point on which we wish them to be effective only by giving them the lightest piece we have, which has most ammunition attached to it, which can be moved about and served with the greatest rapidity.

There are so many inconsistencies observable in the formation of these batteries, that we cannot look upon the matter with any of the satisfaction that we regard the organization of the Punjab irregular force of cavalry and infantry. That they may happen to do very well is quite possible, like many other "palpable absurdities" in this world; but we can never be the less conscious that it would be equally feasible to do altogether without them, or with something much better.—Lahore Chronicle.

MEETING BETWEEN THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL AND MAHARAJA GOOLAB SING.

Our "special commissioner" reports, from the cantonment of Serokee, that Maharaja Goolab Sing reached the neighbourhood of the camp of the Governor-General on Sunday evening, Dec. 22nd, about 4 p.m., ground having been taken up for him and his attendants about two miles in advance of the cantonment, on the right of the road to the town of Wuzeerabad. Brigadier Hearsey, c.s., commanding the station, accompanied by his staff, Mr. Montgomery, the commissioner of Lahore, Mr. Edward Thomas, under secretary, Mr. F. Courtenay, and Major Ramsay (private and military secretaries to the Governor-General), and two aides-de-camp, proceeded, with an escort of irregular cavalry, some distance in advance of the Maharaja's proposed camp, to which they conducted his Highness; on reaching the ground he was saluted with 19 guns from Capt. Delamain's horse battery.

The Maharaja was attended by troops to the amount of about 2,500 men, not presenting a very favourable idea of the vast army the sovereign of Kashmir was, in certain quarters, supposed to have under his command. It happened, unfortunately, that two of his said-to-be best regiments, those of Col. Steinbach (who were on their way to join the cortège of their master, having learnt, on arrival at Shupeeoon from Kashmir town, that a fall of snow, that lasted forty-two hours, had completely blocked up the Peer Punjab Passes), turned back in the hope of finding a better road in another direction. In attempting, however, to make their way through the Baneehal Pass, they were overtaken by a second snow storm, and suffered a loss of from forty to fifty men. The detention they thus encountered prevented their joining the camp of Goolab Sing before he reached Serokee. The Maharaja had himself considerable difficulty in making his way from Kashmir to Jumoo, snow lying in many places, six and eight feet deep. On one occasion his Highness had to take shelter in a cowshed, and ought, by all accounts, to have considered himself fortunate in having even that to avail himself of.

We have already mentioned, that the 24th of December had been fixed as the day on which the Maharaja was to pay his respects to the Marquis of Dalhousie, and every arrangement had been made accordingly. On the morning of the 23rd, however, a painful eruption, from which the Governor-General had been suffering for some days, was so severe that it became necessary to communicate to the Maharaja, that a postponement must take place, and it was consequently intimated to his Highness that he could not be received until the 26th. On the afternoon of the 23rd a large party, consisting of the principal officers in the camp, and others, accompanied by several ladies, proceeded to view the presents brought for the occasion from Kashmir; they were the admiration of all who saw them, fully bearing out the reputation that had preceded them. A Bechoba of shawl manufacture, five splendid shawls, intended specially for presentation to her Majesty the Queen, some jewellery of great value, a steel coat of mail, and several pieces of the small artillery peculiar to the hills, such as zumboors, sherbuchas, &c., were particularly admired. On Tuesday evening the Marchioness of Dalhousie received the whole society, present in camp and cantonments, at an evening party, at which, however, the Governor-General was unable to make his appearance; her ladyship was not sufficiently well to admit of her joining in the dance, Christmas-day was marked, in the vice-regal camp, by various private parties, and an unceasing interchange of presents, amongst which the ample supply of Kashmir fruits of the finest kind brought in abundance with the camp of its ruler, bore a conspicuous part.

On the 26th of December, at about half-past 3 o'clock, the same officers who went to welcome the Maharaja on his first arrival proceeded on elephants to his Highness's camp, and conducted him to the durbar of the Governor-General, who was, we are happy to learn, sufficiently recovered to go through the ceremony with apparent ease to himself. The following arrangements, for the reception of the illustrious guest, had been previously carried out. The durbar tent, across the centre breadth of which the two principal rows of seats had been placed, on the right and left of the Governor-General's, in the form of a horse shoe, was lined at the back by some troopers of the body guard; on the right and left, and along the interior front face, were placed the men of H.M.'s 32nd foot on escort duty with the camp; the entrance was lined, on either side, by the grenadier companies of H.M.'s 10th and 24th regiments of foot. The Governor-General's band was placed at the southern end of the durbar tent, and played during the whole of the interview. Outside the tent were posted, first, a double rank, mounted, of the body guard; secondly, on either side of the main street, a double row of the 15th regiment of native infantry, on escort duty with the camp, and after them the two guns of Major Mackenzie's troop, and Capt. Phillip's wing of the 18th irregular cavalry. Then followed, in single rows, disposed on either side the street (which, in the midst of the first regiment turned at a right angle into the Wuzerabad road), H. M.'s 10th and 24th foot, Captain Delamain's horse battery, the 21st, 32nd, and 34th regiments of native infantry, H. M.'s 9th lancers, at open order, a troop of horse artillery, and Colonel Mackenzie's (the 6th) regiment of irregular cavalry. The street thus formed, from the entrance of the Governor-general's tent, cannot have been less than a mile in extent. Beyond its termination the deputation were met by the Maharaja and his attendants, well-mounted on elephants, that of the Maharaja carrying an elegant silver howda. The whole cortège then advanced in a body, and presented a highly picturesque sight, notwithstanding the dust raised by the clouds of footmen running in attendance on their prince. The effect was considerably heightened by the presence of many ladies, mounted on elephants, who marched with the line outside the street. The magnificent appearance of the 9th lancers attracted the especial attention of the Maharaja, who inquired, on the conclusion of the ceremony, whether the troops were all sahab logues!

On the arrival of the Maharaja, close to the end of the street of the vice-regal camp, at the angle mentioned above, Sir Henry M. Lawrence, the president of the board, and agent to the Governor-General, as respects Goolab Sing and all other chiefs in and about the Punjab, accompanied by Major Burn, deputy-secretary to the board, proceeded on an elephant to receive his Highness, who was welcomed, on his alighting from his howda, by Sir Henry Elliot, the secretary to Government, with the Governor-General. The troops, a double line of which was drawn up along the main street, as above described, presented arms, and the artillery fired a salute of 19 guns. On reaching the border of the carpet in the durbar tent, his Highness was met by the Marquis of Dalhousie, who cordially shook hands with the old man, and conducted the Maharaja to a seat on his own right hand, distinguished by being handsomely carved and gilt. Sir Henry Elliot took the right of the chief, and beyond him were seated Meer Runbeer Sing, the eldest son of the Maharaja, with Sirdars Juwahur Sing and Motee Sing, his nephews and sons of the late Raja Dhean Sing, and also Colonel Stienbach; on the left of the most noble the marquis sat Sir H. Lawrence, Sir Walter Gilbert, Mr. John Lawrence, Brigadier Hearsay, Mr. Montgomery, Mr. E. Thomas, Major Ramsay, and other aides-de-camp, and in the rear of the front row were at least 120 military, with a slight sprinkling of civil, officers. Many were accommodated with seats, but a large portion remained necessarily without them, so great was the crowd.

The Governor-General wore the full dress of a minister of state, with the star, ribbon, and collar of the Thistle; Sir Walter Gilbert, Sir H. Elliot, and Sir Henry Lawrence, also wore their several decorations. Goolab Sing had on a showy turban, with a green and gold choga, and green trousers. His beard was dyed black, and thus gave him the appearance of a man of fifty, though his age is above sixty. His attendants were not generally well dressed, and there was an absence of nationality that detracted much from their appearance. But few had a military look, none in fact that proud soldierly bearing that used especially to distinguish the court of Runjeet Sing on occasions of ceremony.

Immediately after taking their respective seats, the Maharaja, his sons and nephews, presented surwaranas or wave-offerings in cash to the Governor-General, while all the other attendants, who were not allowed seats, were called upon to make offerings in the shape of nuzurs. A few minutes, taken up in conversation between the guest and his noble host, intervened, after which the presents prepared for his Highness on the part of the British Government were displayed. Those for the chief consisted of an elephant, with a silver howda, of two horses, and forty one trays of miscellaneous articles. The trays were brought in and displayed in a double row on the floor before the Maharaja, the Governor-General drawing his Highness's attention to those articles particularly deserving of notice. The peculiar features of Oriental courts and manners were displayed in the presence of two accountants, who, seating themselves on the carpet, paper, pen and ink in hand, proceeded to prepare an inventory of the fine things spread out before them on behalf of their lord and master. A musical box, with a singing bird, attracted the particular attention of the prince, who handed it at once to his confidential minister, Dewan Joala Sahaie, who was standing behind him. The handsomest portion of the presents was a group in silver, of two ancient knights, one of whom is falling, pierced by the spear of his enemy. When the whole of the offerings to the Maharaja had been brought in, the Governor-General rose, and receiving the ornaments in succession from the hands of Mr. Thomas, under secretary, to whom they were passed by the Bengalee Treasurer of the Toshekhuna, himself by far the best dressed native present, tied on his Highness's head a very fine diadem of diamonds, placed a gold chain round his neck, &c., the Jumoo chief, the common sower of thirty years past, standing all the while with his body inclined in an attitude of submission, wondering probably at the freaks of fortune that had raised him from the ranks to become the honoured guest of the Governor General of India, and the independent sovereign of a rich empire.

This ceremony concluded, to witness which the whole company stood up, the presents for the Maharaja's son and nephews were brought in respectively, in the same manner as before, his lordship himself bestowing, on each, and also on Col. Steinbach, the principal articles of jewellery presented. The share of Runbeer Sing, the heir-apparent, was twenty-one trays, while the sons of Raja Dhean Sing had each nineteen trays; the other attendants receiving kheluts according to their rank in the Maharaja's service. The first on the list was Johala Sahnai; after him came Dewan Huree Chund, the general-in-chief of his Highness's army. On his receiving the khelut, Sir Walter Gilbert rose, and addressed a few words to the general, expressing a hope that such a solid peace and lasting friendship had been established as would render a collision extremely improbable. The episode was a pleasing one. Amongst the recipients of his lordship's honours was a native gentleman of the name of Goolab Rae, who, though he may be a very brave man, had all the appearance of having just come out of a buncree's shop. He ought to form a conspicuous figure in the sketch of the ceremony, preparing for the Illustrated London News, by a talented officer of the Bengal Engineers. The distribution of the presents concluded, the interview was brought to a close, by the ordinary oriental fashion of presenting utur, after which the Maharaja took leave, being accompanied by the Governor-General to the centre of the carpet. On passing the silver group, Goolab Sing stopped to admire it. He was told by the Governor-General that it represented the European mode of fighting three hundred years ago, on which his Highness replied, that they fought at present after a more approved fashion! He was further escorted, by Sir Henry Lawrence and Sir Henry Elliot, to the spot where his elephant was in waiting, and to some distance from the camp, by the under-secretary and an aide-de-camp, a parting salute, also, of nineteen guns, intimating to the assembled multitude that the ceremony of that day was concluded; then the troops returned to their respective quarters, and the meeting, between the Maharaja of Kashmir and the Governor-General of India, had become a matter of history.

If we are to believe all the protestations of friendship, goodwill, and gratitude made by his Highness on the occasion of this visit, the political result may perhaps be commensurate to the trouble bestowed on the show. The expense, it is whispered in well-informed quarters, will not be an object of much consequence, seeing that the gifts of his highness far exceed in value those of the Governor-General. The visit to Kashmir is a matter of course.

On the evening of the 26th, the Governor-General entertained a large party of the principal civil and military officers at dinner.

The return visit to the Maharaja of Kashmir was to come off yesterday. We shall probably not be able to give so detailed an account of that ceremony as the above, as circumstances compelled the early return of our "special commissioner," but friends will no doubt furnish an outline of what promised to be a more magnificent "spectacle" than the one we have attempted to describe.

On Friday, the 27th of December, the Marquess of Dalhousie, attended by a brilliant staff, all mounted on elephants, 21 in number, proceeded in state, under a salute of 19 guns, to return the visit paid him the day before by Maharaja Goolab Sing. The following is the order in which the procession moved:—

GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

Sir Henry Elliot.
Brigadier Hearsay.
Mr. J. Lawrence.
Major Ramsay.
Captain Atkinson.
Mr. Thomas.
Dr. Grant.
Major Nuthall.
Lord W. Hay.
M. De la Grange.
Major Boyd.
Lieutenant Tucker.
Captain Lowe.
Captain Phillips.
Mr. M'Donald.
Mr. C. Hill.

Sir Henry Lawrence.
Sir W. Gilbert.
Mr. Montgomery.
Mr. Courtenay.
Major Fane.
Captain Metcalfe.
Captain Bowie.
Captain Davison.
Mr. Lambrecht.
Mr. Macdonald.
Major Burn.
Mr. Inglis.
Captain Loveday.
Lieutenant Walker.
Mr. Prinsep.
Captain Burroughs.

The procession was preceded and followed by detachments of the body guard.

The whole of the troops were out and formed in line, as they had done the day before, from the camp of the Governor-General towards that of Goolab Sing, the troops of the latter being also paraded and completing the line.

His Highness had deputed his son Meer Runbeer Sing, and some Sardars, to go as far as the viceregal camp to meet and escort the Governor-General, and he himself came nearly a mile in advance of his own tents to receive and conduct his lordship to his camp, showing a marked deference in the mode of reception, and establishing his inferiority in a decided manner in the eyes of the swarm of native lookers-on.

On alighting from his howda, which greatly eclipsed anything of the kind in Goolab Sing's suwaree, the Governor-General was conducted into the durbar tent by the Maharaja, who assigned to him a seat on his own right, while Sir Henry Elliot took his place to the left, the other British officers in attendance seating themselves on the right of the Governor-General. The durbar tents were most tastefully arranged, and when all were seated, the Governor-General and the Maharaja at the top of a long vista of tents, with fully 100 officers, in their glittering uniforms, forming a double line on either side, must have presented an imposing spectacle.

The attendants of the Maharaja then presented nuzzurs, and after some conversation, during which Goolab Sing again pressed on the Governor-General his anxiety to see him in Kashmir—an anxiety acquiescingly acknowledged by his lordship—his Highness directed his presents to the Governor-General to be brought in. They consisted of fifty-one trays, with horses and elephants. The tribute shawls of the year, intended for her Majesty, were again the chief objects of attraction. "In brilliant colour and exquisite softness and delicacy of texture," says a correspondent, "they exceeded any thing of the kind I ever saw." Several specimens of guns, of hill manufacture, very tastefully finished, formed another portion of the presents. Among others, a brass gun, called a "Yemsee," because usually carried on a buffalo or bullock, the calibre of which was perhaps half a pound. There were also two "sherbuchas," literally "lion's whelps," or "young lions," of the calibre of about four ounces, with rifled barrels made of steel. These guns are intended to be transported on camels, and can be perched on rocks, the walls of forts, and similar places.

After the offerings to the Governor-General had been disposed of, 21 trays were brought in for Sir Henry Lawrence, and 21 for Sir Henry Elliot. The other officers in attendance on the Governor-General also participated in his Highness's liberality, a list of their names having been previously sent to the Maharaja. Some kheluts were further presented by his Highness, after which utur was served, and the Governor-General rose to depart. His lordship was escorted to the place at which his elephant was in waiting by the Maharaja, and by Meer Runbeer Sing to some distance from the camp. The Governor-General was saluted, both on his arrival and departure, by a discharge of 21 guns, and did not reach his own camp till sunset.

On Saturday, the 28th of December, the entire force at Vizierabad was paraded, under Major-General Sir Walter Gilbert, G.C.B., and Brigadier Hearsey, for brigade exercise in the presence of the Governor-General and Maharaja Goolab Sing. The troops were under arms, on the parade ground behind the camp, a little before 7 A.M., and the Kashmir chief came to the ground about half an hour afterwards. The troops consisted of five corps of infantry, viz.:—Her Majesty's 10th and 24th Foot, the 21st, 32nd, and 34th regiments of Native Infantry, Her Majesty's 9th Lancers, the 4th Native Lancers, and the 6th Irregular Cavalry, with two batteries of artillery—altogether about 5,600 men. After forming line the troops marched round in slow time, then again formed line, advanced, covered by the light companies of the different corps and by the guns, formed square to receive cavalry, again formed line, then columns of companies, the cavalry advancing, charging through the intervals, and retiring under cover of a fire from the artillery. The review concluded with the general salute, after which the Governor-General and the Maharaja returned to their respective camps, and the troops to their several quarters. "It was a fine breezy morning," says another correspondent, "diversified with a few mares' tails, as seamen call the light floating clouds that portend wind. The hills between this and Cashmere, at not fifty miles off, with their sides covered with snow, added to the brilliancy of the scene."

The Governor-General is to visit Seealkote to-morrow (the 29th), and both camps are to move on Monday, Goolab Sing's towards Jumoo, the Governor-General's towards Goojrat. We are told his lordship intends visiting the field of Chilianwala, and trust the obelisk to the memory of those who fell on that bloody field will obtain some of his attention. Rs. 7,000 have been paid in on account of this monument, and about 3,000 more are required to complete it.—Lahore Chronicle and other journals, Dec. 28.

THE SENIORITY SYSTEM.

It is lamentable to observe that, in the most important of all the presidencies, with the largest revenues, the largest population, the most diversified interests, and the largest staff of civilians, the withering influence of the seniority system should be established in full vigour, and that no member of the civil service should ever be permitted to indulge the hope that any manifestation of talent or zeal, or any amount of exertion, will ever prove of the least service in promoting his prospects. The claims to office among us are decided exclusively by a reference to the gradation list of the directory. Promotion goes nearly, if not altogether, as much according to the relative position of the individual in the civil service, as it does in a regiment. The slightest attempt to set aside this rule raises a clamour which effectually prevents the repetition of it. The Government of Bengal appears, at length, to have succumbed to the ascendancy of this mischievous principle. It is the path of peace and tranquillity. A reference to the list silences all remonstrance at once; it teaches every man his exact position and his prospects, and it makes no enemies. Although the Court of Directors have given the public service in India depends on individual merit, they must know that the assertion is utterly gratuitous as regards this presidency, and that, in every instance in which the Government of Bengal has endeavoured to carry out its enlightened views, and to give merit its due reward, it has encountered the fiercest opposition. The system cannot and ought not to last. A strenuous effort must be made during the Charter discussions to bring the nuisance under investigation. Should the opportunity be offered for such an exposure, there will be facts and correspondence submitted to the public which will startle all those who compare the practice of this Government with the ostentatious professions of the Court. The axe must be laid at the root of the evil. Bengal must have an independent and a strong Government, and it will then be enabled to admit the claims of merit without any reference to the clamours of mediocrity and seniority, and give fresh life and animation to the administration of this presidency.—Friend of India, Dec. 19.

The Friend compliments the Bombay presidency on the abandonment of the seniority system of advancement, and wishes the Bengal Government would only dare to do as we do. It is difficult to see any reason why they should not; they are omnipotent in the matter; and, considering the composition of the Council, with a military man at its head, ought to be much less trammelled than we are with civilian prejudices. Yet we do not believe that here we are trammelled with them at all. The Friend may not, perhaps, be aware of how entirely the present seniority system is thrown aside by us: we shall give him a few illustrations. Mr. Reid, our late acting Governor, was four,—Mr. Willoughby, senior member of Council, was three,—Mr. Blane, junior member of Council, was six,—from the head of the list, when they took their seats as councillors, having all been some time before provisional members. Mr. Young, collector of customs at the presidency,—one of the best appointments we have, and one usually conferred on a civilian near the top of the list,—has forty-two seniors. Messrs. Lumsden and Goldsmid, secretaries to Government in the general and revenue department, are twenty-seven and forty-nine respectively from the top of the list; while Mr. C. J. Erskine, Persian secretary to Government, is a civilian of 1839, with seventy-five names above his. It is quite true that the secretaryships to Government are seldom seniority selections,—efficient men must be had, and efficiency and age are not always proportioned to each other; but the very wide departures from the system just indicated will show how little heed is paid to it; while the illustration just given, where selection takes places where good men are indispensable, shows how little consideration in other cases is given to the welfare of the state, compared to the interests of a class of its servants. We have not as yet in India got the length of understanding the first principles of government, or the bases on which public appointments ought to rest. We are apt to look on the country as providing a certain number of incomes, which those who have had the fortune to secure appointments are entitled to divide amongst themselves, instead of viewing the holders of these in the proper light of servants, entitled to requital in proportion as they work, the State having no grounds for interesting itself in any way in individuals, unless inasmuch as they serve it.—Bombay Times, Jan. 1.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES.

The following Act passed the Legislative Council on the 27th December:—

Every unincorporated joint-stock company, whose shares are transferable by the deed, and all literary, scientific, or charitable societies, are entitled to registration, on petition to the Supreme Court at Calcutta, Madras, or Bombay. One half in number of the shareholders in any company (provided that they own at least half the stock) may resolve that the company be registered under the Act, and this resolution shall bind the whole company. Every registered company shall be subject to the following regulations:—

1. It shall hold at least one ordinary general meeting yearly.
2. Seven or more shareholders may call an extraordinary general meeting.
3. No registered company shall buy its own shares or land on the security of its shares, and every such purchase or loan shall be a breach of trust according to all laws now in force.
4. No registered company shall make any loan to any director or registered officer, or to any member of a local committee at any branch or agency, except only in the case of banking companies, to such limited amount, and on such securities as shall be sanctioned by the deed, or, from time to time, by a general meeting of the shareholders of such banking company; and every such transaction, except as aforesaid, shall be a like breach of trust.
5. No director, member of a local committee, or other registered officer, shall become security in any loan with the Company.
6. The accounts shall be audited half yearly.
7. The audited accounts shall be filed in the court in which the company is registered, and a copy shall be sent on demand to any shareholder.

The court, on the petition of any shareholder, may enforce the performance by the directors of any of their duties under this Act, and disobedience to the court shall be punishable as a contempt.

A list of shareholders shall be filed in the court every half year.

Every such registered company shall sue and be sued as if it were an incorporated company, and in no other manner. The same applies to criminal indictments or informations.

When the directors are unable to meet the engagements of the company, they shall declare this at a special meeting by a resolution, which shall forthwith be published in the Government Gazette.

After an adjudication of insolvency against a company, the official assignee shall assess the liabilities rateably amongst the shareholders according to the number of shares held by them respectively, and immediately proceed to collect the same; and non-payment of the assessment by a defaulting shareholder shall be deemed an act of individual insolvency.

MINERAL RESOURCES OF THE PUNJAB.

Leia, Dec. 21.—The Scientific Committee engaged in examining the mineral resources of the Salt Range, and the mountains generally situated to the north of the Punjab, have a most useful and interesting task assigned to them; and if it is executed so as to fulfil the expectations of the Government, the members will gain a reputation much to be envied. The following remark is taken from the advertisement to H. T. de la Beche's work, entitled "How to observe Geology." What benefit has not geology reaped from the activity of "industrious individuals, who, setting aside all theoretical views, have been content to exercise the useful and highly entertaining task of collecting specimens from the countries which they visit." These remarks are a portion from a quotation taken from Sir John Herschel's discourse on the study of Natural Philosophy, which gave rise to the author's work, entitled "How to observe." I had acted according to the spirit of the above remarks, before I had a copy of the work, and to prove their application in my case, I may add that I have had gunpowder, flint glass, vegetable soda, plaster of Paris, alabaster ornaments, and other articles manufactured from my collections. Gold, alum, lime, petroleum, coal, chalk, shells, rock crystals, rock salt, salt from the earth, collected on the borders of the salt-water lake; mineral waters, strongly impregnated with sulphur and iron, are natural productions of which I could only collect specimens, the examination of which is freely open to any scientific inquirer.

I am convinced that any well qualified mineralogist would find in the specimens I have collected, very much to engage his attention, and the proofs of the existence of minerals with which I am not acquainted.

The northern portion of the district of Leia, which embraces the lowest portion of the Salt Range, will be found to contain most valuable mineral productions. I have received specimens of copper glance equal to that examined by Dr. Fleming, and I have no doubt of the existence of an extensive mine, or rather of several veins, which unite in a mine. I shall never regret having come to this almost ultima thule of our possessions, especially if my expectations regarding the mineral products are realized.

It is interesting to trace and connect anecdotes which refer to natural productions.

It is said that Runjeet Sing obtained a large supply of flints from the chalk formation above Maree. I have a supply of flints from the same locality, from which glass has been manufactured, and I can have no hesitation in believing that the record is true.

Report mentions that Goolab Sing, imitating the example of the art mentioned by Virgil, "hand incantus futuri," took a large quantity of sulphur from the vicinity of the village Jaba, situated a little to the south of Maree, and caused it to be conveyed to Jummo: as I have specimens of sulphur from the spot, I believe what I have heard.

There is a story to the effect that an European, I presume he was one of the officers in Runjeet Sing's service, was passing the spot near which the specimens of copper glance were found. By some accident his gun was injured, and he asked the village smith to mend it by a copper fastening. The man replied that he could not do so, because he had no copper. "No copper!" said the traveller, "it is abundant in these hills!" He picked up some bits of earth, and, after kindling a fire, and mixing with it some other substance, produced a bead of copper, which he made over to the smith, who mended his gun. I ought to add that tradition mentions that in former times, there was a copper smelting furnace in the vicinity. I can only say that the Brahmin who gave me the first specimens of copper that I had the good fortune to obtain, mentioned how it was to be smelted with borax, and the result of the rude experiment was the production of a bead of pure copper that was only one-fourth less in weight than the ore. When the specimens of copper glance from the same neighbourhood were subsequently brought to me, I had little difficulty in believing the story that I had heard.

It has appeared to me as very extraordinary, that with the immense quantity of limestone of every kind to be obtained at the foot of the Salt Range, so little use should have been made of that material in the public and private buildings in the Punjab.—Communicated to the Delhi Gazette.

THE RAILWAY.

The Act for putting the railway officers in possession of the land was passed on Friday the 20th of December, after FIVE days of the season for work had been lost; and it was fully expected, that as every legal difficulty had now been completely removed, active operations would have commenced on Monday morning; but we regret to state that TEN days more have been allowed to pass without any movement. It is said that the Commissioner does not consider himself armed with sufficient power by the late enactment, to proceed at once to take possession of the land, and make it over to the railway officers, though it would be difficult to conceive of an Act more complete, more decisive, and more stringent in its provisions. It is not easy to discover any ground for this disastrous delay. It is generally rumoured, that there is an intention in this town to throw every possible obstruction in the way of these operations, and to "Grand Jury" the Commissioner and the Magistrate, the moment they begin to act; but the Commissioner cannot surely have allowed himself for a moment to have been scared by any such idle vapouring. The history of our rail presents a sad series of fatalities. There seems to be something in the very atmosphere of Bengal fatal to that energy which is the characteristic of the Anglo-Saxon race in every other part of the world. On the present occasion, two months out of the four which nature has provided for field operations in Bengal, have been wantonly frittered away, and we have a gloomy foreboding that the same principle of dilatoriness and lethargy will mark all the progressive operations of the rail. The Government of India has not acted discreetly in this matter. The inquiries connected with the approaching termination of the Charter will commence immediately; and public interest will be powerfully attracted to the great questions of our public administration in India. This is not the season for sloth; yet in reference to one of the most important national enterprises ever intrusted to this Government, it has manifested a degree of apathy and indifference which is calculated to bring in question the wisdom of again confiding the destinies of India to its hands, unless it is possible to infuse a new principle of vitality into the Government, and to give the requisite energy to its movements.—Friend of India, Jan. 2.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MAIL, with letters from London to Nov. 24, reached Calcutta per Hindustan, Jan. 4.

MURDER.—An American, named Booth, was found murdered in his bed at the Calcutta Ice-house on the 3rd of January. The crime was committed by four American seamen, who have been since apprehended. The reckless and buccanier spirit evinced by the culprits was most characteristic; their sole object in committing the crime (which was deliberately planned beforehand) was plunder; and they talked openly of it in the sailors' taverns they frequented, which it appears they were in the habit of attending with pistols and bowie knives concealed under their dress.

MILITARY ON-DUTY.—We have been informed that it has been determined to keep all the troops at Wuzerabad for two years, or at least until the barracks are ready for Europeans at Sealkote. H.M. 3rd Dragoons are to occupy the 9th Lancer barracks, and were to have left Sealkote for Wuzerabad on the 30th of that purpose. H.M. 9th Lancers were to have commenced their march towards Umballa on the 1st or 2nd of January, 1851.—The head-quarters of the Commander-in-Chief's camp may be expected to arrive at this station, in progress to Agra, to-day. We have heard, upon what we consider excellent authority, that Brigadier Frith, of the artillery, purposes going to England in May, 1851.—A letter from Mooltan says:—"We are all quite strong again here, and the number of sick is decreasing rapidly. We have had very merry doings here during the last week, and on Christmas day, a party of forty sat down to dinner at one house, and afterwards the whole of the good folks at Mooltan assembled during the evening, and kept it up until 3 A.M."—Our obituary contains the names of Captain Rees, 65th N.I., and Captain James Thompson, 19th N.I.—The weather is unusually mild and dry.—Delhi Gaz. Jan. 9.—The wings of the 18th and 70th Foot remain at Allahabad for the arrival of the boats with the other wing and head quarters of H.M.'s 70th from Calcutta.—The Calcutta Morning Chronicle mentions a rumour that Capt. Hugh Frazer, of the Engineers, is to succeed Capt. Scott as Secretary to the Military Board. Capt. Frazer is a very popular man in the army, but there is reason to fear that he is too useful as an engineer to be spared from that department.

MESSRS. AGABEG & Co.—The Hurkaru of Jan. 4 announces the stoppage, on that day, of the firm of Messrs. Agabeg & Co., merchants of Calcutta.

THE COORG RAJAH (Rajendro Sing) is about to visit Calcutta, whence he will proceed to England. It is said that Jung Bahadur is going to marry the Raja's daughter.

THE BANK OF BENGAL has declared a dividend of 10½ per cent. per annum for the half-year ending Dec. 31; it has also raised its rates one per cent. upon all advances, which is owing to the pressure for money at Madras and Bombay, rather than because of any increased demand in Calcutta.

SAUGOR AND NERBUDDA TERRITORY.—The Mofussilite mentions as a rumour, that the Saugor territory is about to be placed under the immediate authority of the Lieutenant-governor of the North-west Provinces, and supposes that Gwalior, the ceded districts, Bundelcund and Rajpootana, will also be placed under the same supervision. The annexation of the Saugor and Nerbudda territory to the Agra Presidency, together with Bundelcund and Rajpootana, is, we believe, exceedingly probable, as those provinces, from their geographical distribution, belong more immediately to that division of the empire, but Gwalior is not likely to be included in the list. It is only a political agency, and ought to remain as it is, under the direct control of the government of India.—Friend of India.

MR. J. J. McCANN, LATE DEPUTY SUPERINTENDENT OF THE CALCUTTA POLICE.—The remains of the late deputy-superintendent of police, who had for many years held a conspicuous place in the public eye, as an useful, active and intelligent police officer, were on the 18th Dec., consigned to the grave. As a detective agent he has not been equalled, and as an efficient executive officer, he has not been surpassed. The public have lost in him a most useful servant. Whatever his faults may have been, he had many good qualities.

COTTON IN THE DARJEELING MORUNG.—At a meeting of the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of India, on the 14th December, an interesting paper from Dr. Campbell, regarding the cultivation of cotton in the Darjeeling Morung, and the capabilities of that tract for the extensive growth of superior cottons, was read. Dr. Campbell forwarded a parcel of fresh picked cotton-pods from the Morung, observing, "I judge of the fitness of the Morung soil for the cultivation of cotton from the uniformly flourishing appearance of the crops in that locality."

THE BHAGERUTTEE has become so shallow that small boats can hardly cross it, or proceed as far as Jungeepore.

BABOO KYLAS CHUNDER DUTT, son of Baboo Russomoy Dutt, having been appointed a justice of the peace for the presidency of Fort William and the provinces of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, was this day sworn in before Justice Buller. This is the first native gentleman who has been appointed to the office, as both Rajah Radacant Deb and Dwarkanauth Tagore were justices of the peace for the town of Calcutta only.—Hurkaru, Dec. 7.

A COLLEGE is about to be erected at Agra, for the purpose of affording education upon a religious basis; an education equal to that which is imparted to the native youth at the Government Institution. Rs. 24,000 have been already subscribed for the purpose, and two gentlemen of high attainments are now on their way out to this country to superintend the working of the scheme.

ADVOCACY OF IDOLATRY.—A new Bengalee work, styled Dibando Niroshon, has just been issued from the press. Its object is to support idolatry, the popular religion of the Hindus, on the authority of the Purans, and the ancient Hindu Scriptures; and in opposition to the celebrated treatise against Hindu idolatry, by the late Baboo Brojomohun Mozamdar.—Sumbad Sudangshoo.

CHANGES IN MERCANTILE FIRMS.—The turn of the year has brought the usual number of changes in mercantile firms. The house of Johnson and Griffiths is dissolved, or rather, we should say, resolved into the two firms of Johnson Brothers (partners, P. and J. Johnson) and of S. P. Griffiths, the former winding up the concerns of the extinct partnership. Mr. B. T. Ford goes out of Stewart, Ford, and Co., which is wound up by Mr. P. Stewart, the remaining partner, who starts meanwhile as P. Stewart and Co. A firm of one member, Mendes and Co., dissolves itself, the same member (F. Pereira, Esq.) undertaking after his dissolution to liquidate the outstanding accounts, and springing into new existence as Pereira and Co., along with Mr. Louis Pereira. Mr. C. H. Pickford is admitted a partner in the house of Thurburn, Mathewson, and Co.; Mr. T. C. Teil into that of G. Teil, which will thenceforward be conducted under the title of Teil Brothers and Co. Mr. Harrison beards the requisitionists of the I. G. S. N. company, by starting the firm of J. F. Harrison and Co. We are informed he has tendered his resignation of the Steam Company's secretaryship as soon as the accounts are audited, and that an active canvas for the place is prosecuted by every one whom it will suit, and by some who can by no manner of means suit it.

PESHAWUR.—We regret to find by letters from Peshawur, that with the cold weather the plundering has again commenced. Scarcely a night passes without some one being robbed, and the robberies are frequently effected in a most daring manner during the dark nights. Almost every one is obliged to keep chowkeedars, and a correspondent describing the state of things says, "Their firing at the thieves and the thieves at them is something frightful." A few nights ago a conductor had the door of his quarters burst open in the middle of the night by four men, and before he could get up one fellow stood over him with a drawn sword, and threatened him with instant death if he moved; the remainder of the party rifled the place, and took among other things a musical box, no doubt fancying from its weight that it contained a goodly amount of cash. It is said to be very dangerous to venture out unarmed after nightfall, and most people going out to dine even a short distance from their quarters are obliged to carry double-barrelled guns loaded with slugs, to protect them, a sword being utterly useless, as the thieves generally take a long shot at their victims before coming to close quarters. Two sowars of the 15th Irregulars were returning from the city about 8 o'clock P.M., a few nights ago, when they were attacked by three men, one of whom fired, and shot one of the sowars, wounding him severely in the abdomen, from the effects of which he died the next day. This occurred near some officers' houses, and the guard, hearing the firing, and the cries of the wounded man, went out and brought him in. The Governor-General was expected at Peshawur about the 29th or 30th, and brigade exercise is said to be the order of the day.—Delhi Gazette, Dec. 21.

ILLUMINATIONS AT LAHORE.—The Governor-General held two levees, for the reception of the native officers of the force at Lahore,—the first at Meen Meer, the second at Anarkulee. His lordship, accompanied by the Marchioness of Dalhousie, the president and members of the Board of Administration, and other public functionaries, and attended by the body guard, proceeded into the town, and along its principal streets, to the Wuzer Khan Mosque. Here Lord Dalhousie remained till after sunset, when the illumination began; the minars, the entrance and side gates, the walls and tank, soon exhibiting a brilliant display of lights, diversified by fireworks. The example was speedily followed in all directions, the house of Raja Deenanath showing to special advantage. It is said of this distinguished minister of Runjeet Sing, and who was in the court of the mosque, that when reminded that the time for commencing the illumination was at hand, he replied, in Oriental phrase, "What need of such, in the presence of the light of the world?" The Governor-General resumed his seat on his elephant (the howda was the admiration of all, and showed to great advantage by torch-light), and led the way through the several illuminated streets to the Bhutee gate, where the Sooruj Mookee regiment were drawn up to receive his lordship. The exit of the cortège from the gate, with the troops on one side, and the crest of the glacié, teeming with torches, themselves obscured by fireworks, was peculiarly striking. The band of the regiment struck up the national anthem. From the Bhutee gate the procession passed into the Sudur Bazaar, which was also lit up. There the Governor-General entered his carriage, and proceeded to his camp. The display in the town was really very creditable. The new Kotwalee had a transparency, "Lahore welcomes Lord Dalhousie, Governor-General of India." Some of the streets had awnings thrown over them, from house-top to house-top, and that in which is situate the house of Fuqueer Noor-ood-deen was particularly attractive. The venerable fuqueer himself, at the door, was not the least remarkable object; he is said to have paid for the lighting of all the houses in his own street.—Lahore Chron.

THE GRANT TO THE TEMPLE OF JUGGURNATH.—The Hurkaru informs us that the Court of Directors have made up their minds to stop the annual grant to the temple of Juggurnath at Pooree, and have sent out orders to the authorities here to search and report whether any positive engagement was ever entered into for continuing the contribution; and that the Rajah of Khoordah, who is in charge of the idol, has, in consequence, become uneasy about his stipend. There is no positive engagement, it is true, in the literal sense of the word, regularly sealed, signed, and delivered, in the form of a conveyance; but if the paramount power does not choose to adhere to its own faith, parchments are of little avail in binding it down to the performance of a covenant. By the treaty of Deogaum, dated 17th December, 1803, the province of Cuttack was ceded to the British, who succeeded in the place of the Mahrattas in the management of the temple. Mr. C. Græme was appointed "collector of Juggurnath," charged with the general superintendence of the pagoda, as well as the collection of the pilgrim-tax and the rents of the land assigned to it. The revenue derived from this latter source, according to a statement furnished by the Board of Revenue to the then Governor-General, the Marquis of Cornwallis, dated 2nd August, 1805, was Rs 4,27,463 per annum. This large sum of money excited the cupidity of our Government, and the estates were brought upon the public rent-roll, while the Board of Revenue was, in 1806, directed to submit a statement of the expenses of the temple "on a scale of moderation." Accordingly, the annual allowance was limited, under orders from Government, to Rs. 56,342, which were further brought down, in January, 1808, on the report of Mr. Collector Græme, to Rs. 35,958. This sum continued to be paid every year by the collector of Cuttack, until the close of 1844, when a despatch having been received from the Court of Directors, dated 18th December of that year, the local authorities set themselves about "to readjust the donation (now so called) fixed by the orders of Government." In vain Mr. Collector Garret protested against it, as being extremely unfair. The grant was, on the recommendation of Mr. Commissioner Mills, reduced to Rs. 23,321. It is, therefore, not improbable that, after the lapse of six years, another effort will be made either to withdraw the allowance altogether, or to cut it down again. The call of the Court of Directors for a specific engagement is no doubt very ingenious, but hardly just. Although the State has had its lion's share of the revenues of the temple, still it is not satisfied. The mischief of territorial aggrandizement has quite hardened the soil and stunted the growth of those virtues which might otherwise have borne excellent fruit.—Hindu Intelligencer, Dec. 16.

LAW.

SUPREME COURT, Dec. 20.

The Court of Small Cause.—After several motions had been heard, Sir William Burton made the following remarks:—

"I announced to the gentlemen of the profession who did me the honour of attending me at chambers on Friday last, that I have consented to aid in the execution of the Act No. IX. of 1850, in the trial of all cases which shall be brought before me, as a judge of the Supreme Court sitting in the Supreme Court under that Act. I have now to state that I have appointed the prothonotary of this court to perform those duties which are directed by the Act to be performed by the clerks in the Courts of Small Causes, and the sheriff to perform those which are thereby directed to be performed by the bailiffs of such courts. The sealer, the interpreters and inferior officers of the court, will act in their several capacities, and shall receive an equitable apportionment of the fees which shall be received under the Act according to the amount of their labour.

"I have appointed, for the present, every Tuesday at 9 o'clock, A.M. for the return of processes, and for the hearing of cases, an arrangement which will admit of adjournment, as may be found necessary during the vacation, and of some time at least for the same purpose during term.

"I have not thought it necessary at present to make any rules, being of opinion that the Act itself points out sufficiently the mode in which cases are to be conducted, and provides that 'in any case not expressly provided for by the Act, or by the said rules, the general principles of practice in the Supreme Court may be adopted and applied at the discretion of the judges as to actions and proceedings in their court.' This provision, with the discretionary power included in it, will probably be found sufficient for all purposes. But I have always the power under the Act of making from time to time such rules as may be necessary.

"Upon this first occasion of sitting under the Act, I desire briefly to explain the reasons which have caused me to undertake the labour which will necessarily be incurred in the execution of it. They are simply these.

"1stly. That I thus preserve to the public that right which Parliament and the King of England conferred by charter on all the subjects of her Majesty and her Majesty's royal predecessors, being inhabitants of this place, of bringing their suits before this her Majesty's Supreme Court of Judicature; a right of which the recent Act of the Legislature would have deprived them altogether, in cases coming within its purview, if neither of the judges of this court had consented to aid in its execution.

"2ndly. That the jurisdiction, which will thus be exercised by me, is not a jurisdiction taken away from the existing Courts of Requests, but is only preserved to the Supreme Court, concurrently with the courts of the East-India Company: the only difference being that the proceedings are to be summary.

"3rdly. And this is one principal reason of my intervention, I have long been of opinion that the ordinary modes of procedure in this court are not adapted to the native population, and that no administration of justice could be so acceptable or appropriate to them as that which is summary. The wrongs which they inflict upon each other (I will allude to one class only as illustrative of this—the wrongful taking and holding possession of houses by individuals amongst them) admit of no other adequate remedy: and I look to the judicious exercise of this part of the court's jurisdiction with the most sanguine expectation of a happy result. The wrongful intruder upon another's right will now be as summarily expelled, and it will be scarcely worth his while now to put himself into that position. With respect to debts and demands also, I am of opinion that the mode prescribed is precisely that which is adapted to the population; and thus far this measure of the Supreme Government has had my hearty concurrence; and I am happy that I have, by God's blessing, present strength to show the sincerity of that concurrence. But I must own that the details of the new Act are not such as I can constitutionally approve of.

"In the first place, I am of opinion that the great object of the Government would have been better and more constitutionally obtained, by giving a summary jurisdiction to the judges of her Majesty's Supreme Court in all such cases as are comprised in the Act before me; and the expense to the Government of the Courts of Requests might have been spared.

"2ndly. I consider the expense to suitors under this Act is still too great; a very small scale of fees might, I think, have been adopted, not amounting in the whole to more than one-half of the deposit and fees to be taken under the Act.

"Upon this point, however, I am happy to say that a power is given to the Right Honourable the Governor-in-Council of reducing the expense of suits, if such shall seem meet; and I shall take care, if I find that the fees in this branch of my jurisdiction should ever amount to more than a fair remuneration to the officers of the Court for the business performed by them, to represent that fact to the Right Honourable the Governor, and recommend a reduction; so that the suitors may have the double advantage of a prompt and cheap administration of justice.

"The labour which will thus be cast upon me, I account as nothing. The object of doing justice to those who suffer wrong is to my mind sufficiently great to be worth even a greater sacrifice than I am making in consenting to aid in the execution of the act of the Supreme Government."—Athenæum.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MAIL, with letters from London to Nov. 24, reached Madras on New Year's-day.

RETIREMENTS.—Lieut. A. W. Bernal, 7th L.C., has obtained leave of absence preparatory to applying for permission to resign the service. Major Manning, of the 1st N.V. Battalion, is also about to retire.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF AND STAFF, landed at Madras from Masulipatam, under a salute of 17 guns from the garrison, on Jan. 7th.

MR. ALEXANDER ORR, late of the firm of Gordon and Co., of Madras, who failed in his endeavour to get admitted on the list of attorneys of the Madras Supreme Court, has been admitted a solicitor by the Court of Calcutta, and was highly complimented on the proficiency which he displayed on his examination.

SIR HENRY MONTGOMERY welcomed the Commander-in-Chief at a grand ball and supper on the evening of Wednesday last; when his Excellency the Governor honoured the occasion with his presence. The worthy host engaged the vocal services of Signor Agius.—Athenæum, Jan. 11.

THE 24TH REGT. N.I. were to leave Seetabuldee on Jan. 2 for Saugor, its new destination.

PAPER MANUFACTURED IN INDIA.—A large bundle of samples of country paper had been shown at Madras; it embraced a considerable variety of texture, manufactured at the Monegar Choultry under the direction of Dr. Hunter.

PONDICHERY.—M. Bedier (Philippe Achille) the new governor of the French establishments in India—arrived by the Eurydice Jan. 6. The Governor left the vessel under a salute of thirteen cannon, which, on his landing, was repeated by the battery. He was met on the shore by the judge of the peace, and was received at the Government hotel by the interim Governor along with the council of administration, by whom he was conducted to the Hall of Honour. The interim Governor then briefly addressed M. Bedier, resigning the authority into his hands, and the new Governor in a few well chosen words expressed his acknowledgments. M. Bedier appears to be universally regarded as a worthy successor to the lamented M. Lande de Calan. The Moniteur says—"The well known character of M. Bedier guarantees to us every solicitude for the interests of the country, and we are sure that the devotedness of the functionaries who have been called upon to assist him in the administration will not be wanting to the new Governor."

ROBBERY OF PAGODA PROPERTY.—The Circulator adverted to the robbery of a gold pot belonging to a celebrated Hindoo temple. The parties suspected of the theft, and in the possession of some of whom plates and bars of gold were found, were apprehended and tried by the judge, Mr. Boileau, and although there were eight witnesses brought forward in support of the prosecution, and their evidence went to prove the fact, and not a single witness was produced by any of the prisoners, yet they were all acquitted. Pagoda property is at present placed on so insecure a footing; and the whole question relating to the temples, and to the responsibility of the trustees, is in such an anomalous state that some legislation is acquired for the security of this species of property. Many robberies have been committed which have not come to light; and the present one, although known the very night it was perpetrated, was not brought to the notice of the collector till a year after, and this too would not have done but for the enmity of the rival managers.

GUTTA PERCHA.—The following is an amusing exemplification of the apathy exhibited by Indian governments towards projects having in view the improvement of the resources of the country. In September, 1847, Capt. Gompertz, of 6th M.N.I., forwarded to Government a number of articles made of gutta percha, a material at that time but little known, with a recommendation that the tree from which it is produced should be cultivated in the jungle and forest land of India. The authorities of Madras, with due official gravity, deliberated on the proposition for one whole year, and then declared that the article "did not appear likely to be of any use for purposes of public service."

THE DIRECTORS OF THE MADRAS BANK, foreseeing a pressure on the money market, have applied to the local government for three lacs of rupees, offering to pay the amount in Calcutta through their agents. The Madras authorities have consented, on condition of being first certified that the Bengal Treasury has received the money. The Bank has declared a dividend for the past half-year at the rate of seven per cent. per annum.

THE EXAMINATION OF THE SCHOLARS OF THE HIGH SCHOOL took place in presence of the Right Hon. the Governor, the Hon. D. Elliott, Messrs. Ouchterlony, T. Key, Liddell, Crawford, Salmon, and Wm. Holloway, Rev. Messrs. Hamilton and Macfarlane, and others, and a great number of native gentlemen. The pupils were examined in chemistry, history, geography, political economy, and trigonometry, by Dr. Key, Messrs. Salmon and Holloway, and the first and second masters, and it is reported, went through their various exercises in a creditable manner.

NEW PAROCHIAL SCHOOL.—The St. Andrew's Parochial was opened on the 7th of January. The new master, Mr. Armour, arrived by a late steamer.

RUSSELLCOTTAH, December 23.—A wing of the 36th regiment was to leave Samulcottah on the 26th ult., to relieve the wing of the 18th regiment, N.I. at present here.

We regret to announce the demise, at Bangalore, on Jan. 3, of Lieut. D. J. T. King, of the 4th Regt. Light Cavalry. This casualty promotes Cornet C. R. Stainforth to a Lieutenantcy.

BELLARY, December 30.—An inquest had been held on the bodies of two children, reported to have been killed by the fall of an out-office in the compound of Captain Carruthers, 1st Regt. N.I. It appears that one of the beams had been for some time cracked and insecure. The houses in this part of the country require constant attention, as the roofs, being composed of mud, are liable, when saturated, to fall suddenly.

PROMOTION BY RETIREMENT.—It affords us much pleasure to learn, that Major Hall's excellent scheme for promoting the retirement of lieutenant-colonels—although still far from meeting the support to which it is entitled, and which would be awarded to it if the service knew their own interests—is gradually making way among his brethren in arms. The last circular put forth by him had appended to it the names of ten lieutenant-colonels, willing to subscribe each Rs. 100, for every step above them, and two others have since been added to the list, besides the seniors of grades of another corps, and all the juniors of the grades of three more, with one or two exceptions. If these good examples are generally followed, it will insure a sum of Rs. 10,000 free from all deductions, and so secure an immediate step, by the retirement of a lieutenant-colonel. We heartily commend the opportunity thus offered, to the notice of our military readers, and particularly to that of those who will derive direct benefits, i. e. the majors and lieutenant-colonels standing below him willing to retire. These surely ought to subscribe.—Spectator.

CHANGES IN COMMERCIAL FIRMS.—A new firm, under the designation of Walker & Son, has been established from Jan. 1. Messrs. R. N. Morrison, and James Dale, have been admitted partners in the firms of Morrison & Co. and Labour & Co., from the same date. Messrs. G. J. Deschaumbeaux have ceased to belong to the firm of De Colons & Co.; Mr. W. M'Taggart to that of Arbuthnot & Co.; and Mr. G. Spilman to that of Amalric, Lecot, & Co.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

MOVEMENTS OF TROOPS.

The movement of the 9th regt. N.I. to Vellore, ordered in G.O.G. 9th July, 1850, No. 138, is cancelled, and the following movements are ordered:—

9th Regt. N.I., at present halted at Secunderabad, to Madras.
28th Regt. N.I., from Khyook Phyyoo to Vellore.
43rd Regt. N.I., from Madras to Khyook Phyyoo.

ENSIGN HERBERT WODEHOUSE, 15TH N.I.

Head-Quarters, Camp Shumshabad, Dec. 6, 1850.—At a general court-martial held at Secunderabad, on Thursday, Nov. 28, 1850, Ens. H. Wodehouse, 15th N.I. was arraigned on the following charge, viz:—

Charge.—For conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline in having at Chimiah Taikoor, on the morning of Nov. 4, 1850, left the camp of his regt. and proceeded to Kurnool, distant about 9 miles, without leave, so remaining absent from his regt. until the following morning, when he rejoined it at Nurroor; he, Ens. H. Wodehouse, on the evening of the 3rd of the same month, having been positively refused permission to proceed to the said station of Kurnool, by his comm. off. Lieut.-col. Bremner, 15th N.I.

Finding.—Guilty.

Revised Sentence.—To be suspended from rank and pay and allowances for the period of three calendar months.

Confirmed, but I consider it a most lenient sentence for most wilful disobedience of orders.

(Signed) G. H. F. BRERKELEY, Lieut.-gen. C.-in-C.

The period of suspension awarded Ens. H. Wodehouse, is to commence from the date of the promulgation of this order at Secunderabad, which is to be reported to the Adj.-gen. of the army.

LIEUT. JOHN HOWARD IMLACH GRANT, 50TH N.I.

Head-Quarters, Choultry Plain, Jan. 9, 1851.—At a general court-martial, held at Fort Saint George, on Thursday, Oct. 30, 1850, and continued by adjournment, Lieut. J. H. I. Grant, 50th N.I., was arraigned on the following charges, viz:—

First.—For unofficerlike conduct, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having at Madras, on Oct. 21, 1850, when on sick report, absented himself from the quarters at the Gen. Hosp., without leave, so remaining absent until the 26th of the same month, in the same year, the same being contrary to the regulations of the service, and in disobedience of instructions from H.E. the C.-in-C., conveyed to him in a letter from the Dep. Adj.-gen. of the army, dated Oct. 1, 1850.

Second.—For having at Madras, on Nov. 10, 1850, when under arrest, left his confinement before he was set at liberty by proper authority, he, furthermore, being at the time on the sick report.

First Additional Charge.—For having at Madras, on Nov. 15, 1850, when under arrest, left his confinement before he was set at liberty by proper authority.

Second Additional Charge.—For having at Madras, on Nov. 16, 1850, when under arrest, left his confinement before he was set at liberty by proper authority.

Finding.—Guilty of all the charges.

Sentence.—To be cashiered.

Fort St. George, Madras, Dec. 16, 1850.

Approved and confirmed.

(Signed) G. H. F. BRERKELEY, Lieut.-gen. C.-in-C.

Lieut. J. H. I. Grant is to be struck off the strength of the army from Jan. 9, 1851.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL of Dec. 7, arrived at Bombay on the 5th ult. per Ajdaha.

BOMBAY ASIATIC SOCIETY.—The Bombay Times supplies us with the following statistical detail of the resources and expenditure of the Asiatic Society of that Presidency:—In 1849 the Society numbered 126 members, of whom 49 were of the naval and military, and 42 of the civil service, with 25 other European and ten native gentlemen. The cost of the books purchased amounted to Rs. 1,489, periodicals Rs. 950, Indian newspapers Rs. 500,—in all Rs. 2,939; the charge of management being Rs. 2,000: making a total of Rs. 4,939. To meet this there were the subscriptions of 92 resident members at Rs. 100 each, and 36 non-resident members at Rs. 30 each,—or in all Rs. 10,290; leaving a balance of upwards of Rs. 5,300, liabilities deducted, in favour of the Society."

ARRIVAL OF THE NEW GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF PORTUGUESE INDIA.—Baron Omen arrived from Suez on Jan. 6, and landed under a salute. A guard of honour and the garrison band were in attendance on the Bunder at an early hour, but they were sent away at his Excellency's request, previous to his disembarkation, which was quite private. The Government-house at Malabar Point had been fitted up for his reception, but his Excellency has preferred taking up his quarters with the Portuguese Consul, Mr. Braz Fernandes, at Bandora, whither accordingly he proceeded from the Bunder. His Excellency was accompanied by his lady, and a numerous suite. He left Bombay for Goa on the 10th of January.

THE DEFICIENCY OF COAL AT ADEN is reported to be so great at present, that the Bombay Government have required of late to borrow 2,000 tons from the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, whose stores are beginning to fall so low that no further accommodation can be allowed by them for the present. The Saron and Anna Mitchell, with coal for Government, have both been lost on their way out.

FATAL ACCIDENT TO CAPT. HOWARD.—The melancholy death of Captain Howard, of the 33d N.I., is announced. It was occasioned by a fall, or being thrown from his horse at Mhow, on Thursday evening, the 9th January. The unfortunate gentleman lingered until the following morning, when death occurred, and he was buried on the morning of the 11th, attended to the grave by his comrades in arms. The cause of Captain Howard's accident is surmised to have been either a fit, or a sudden seizure of giddiness, as he was observed to seize his horse's neck as if to prevent his falling off. But other reports aver that the animal was startled and ran away down a somewhat steep road, leading from the fort down to the post-office, and that falling on his head, he received a kick which fractured the skull. He spoke once or twice, and appeared to suffer much pain before he died. What will certainly add to the poignant grief of his friends and relatives at home, is the circumstance of the deceased officer having made every preparation for going to Europe; and he was on the eve of departing for Bombay. His loss will be long and deeply regretted, for he was a good companion as he was steady, orderly, and with respect, be it said, a pious man.

ANTIQUITIES.—The Bombay Government have secured the services of Mr. Fallon, at a stipend of Rs. 400 a month, to make copies of the paintings, reliefs, and sculptures of the caves of Western India. We are glad that we, with whom the whole movement on the subject of these investigations took its rise, have ourselves been able to move at last, and to secure an artist from amongst our citizens likely to do justice to a subject of so great importance. Of course in such cases as this, rigid fidelity is the great requisite—we want perfect fac similes, and no scope whatever can be allowed for embellishment.—Bombay Times.

INDORE.—The model electric telegraph, with 300 yards of wire in gutta percha, has arrived here, and upwards of 2,000 yards more is expected. The wire is about the size of an ordinary clay pipe, the aperture representing the size of the wire, and the clay the thickness of the gutta percha. A line is to be started to test the fact as to whether the white ants will attack the covering of the wire or not. A model railway, with train and carriage, has also arrived, and is shortly to be set to work. Fortunate, indeed, is the state of Indore in having as its resident a public officer whose enlightened mind is ever at work for the public weal and the advancement of the people. The young Rajah, too, is said to be a very promising youth, who has been wisely and carefully brought up under Mr. Hamilton's supervision, and has imbibed a decided taste for scientific and literary acquirements.

CAPT. H. B. TURNER, formerly mint engineer, and who returned amongst us by the Queen steamer, is, we understand, very likely to be appointed superintending engineer at Poonah, in room of Col. Grant, gone home on furlough; Capt. Kilner, who has held the acting appointment during the period of Col. Grant's sick leave, is junior in the service to Capt. Turner. A multitude of changes will follow on the retirement of Col. Jarvis, in March, and the assumption of the appointment of superintending engineer of the presidency by Col. Waddington.—Bombay Times.

THE NATIVE COMMERCIAL FAILURE.—The failure of Messrs. Dadabhoi and Muncherjee Pestonjee has been (states the Bombay Times) followed by two other failures of very considerable amount—those of a Parsee and a Banian: "the former, indeed, is already in the bankrupt list—the latter will be, so today or to-morrow (the 15th or 16th Jan.)."

THE MINT ENGINEER.—Capt. Burke, mint engineer, has had his leave of absence cancelled, and now continues at the presidency in his present appointment. On the occurrence of a vacancy in the mastership, the appointment will, we believe, be conferred on the engineer of the Mint, who will hold the conjoint office of master, engineer, and worker, at a salary of Rs. 2,000 a month, saving some Rs. 900. The Mint master at present receives Rs. 1,666; the Mint engineer Rs. 1,234. Matters will thus be assimilated at Bombay to the position in which they will hereafter be in the Royal Mint, where Sir John Herschell is now master and worker, and to that in which they have for some time stood at Calcutta and Madras. The saving altogether effected by this in salaries and in improved management will probably be no less than half a lakh a year—if the views of Major Smith under the new management be worked out.—Bombay Times.

HIS HIGHNESS THE GUICOWAR OF BARODA has appointed a resident at Bombay.

PRESENTATION TO THE HEAD BUILDER IN THE DOCKYARD.—The Governor has held a durbar in the Town Hall, for the purpose of presenting to Cursetjee Rustumjee, Esq., head builder in the dockyard, a case of silver mathematical instruments, sent out by the Hon. the Court of Directors to that Parsee in acknowledgment of their approbation of his long and arduous services. The ceremony took place in the large room of the Town Hall, and was witnessed by a numerous assemblage of European and native gentlemen. Among the former were the Commander-in-Chief, the Honble. Mr. Blane, Commodore Lushington, Mr. Malet, Colonel Melville, Mr. Erskine, Captain Jenkins, I.N., Captain Frushard, I.N., Captain French, and a large number of naval officers. Shortly after the Governor's taking his seat, Mr. Cursetjee Rustumjee and his son, Mr. Ardaseer Cursetjee, who holds the office of chief engineer and inspector of machinery in the dockyard, were introduced to his lordship and Sir John Grey by the Persian Secretary. Lord Falkland then rose and addressed Mr. Cursetjee Rustumjee in brief but appropriate terms, gracefully adverting to the distinguished services of that gentleman, as well as to those of other members of the Lowjee family who had preceded him, and of his son then present, and concluded by presenting to him, in the name of the Court of Directors, the set of silver mathematical instruments sent out by them in token of their approbation of his conduct during his long career of service under them.

MILITARY ITEMS.—Captain the Hon. F. C. G. Fitzclarence, 10th Royal Hussars, lately A.D.C. to Sir W. Cotton, would it was believed, be employed on the staff of the Right Hon. the Governor as an extra A.D.C.—The 15th Regiment N.I. marched from Kurrachee for Shikarpore on the 1st Jan., to relieve the 26th Regiment N.I.—The left wing 8th N.I. arrived on the 14th Jan. from Rajkote, for garrison duty. The wing 27th N.I. would leave the presidency for Poonah on the 20th. We are sorry to hear of the death of Assist.-Surg. H. Johnstone, M.D. attached to the H.C. brig Euphrates, now in the Persian Gulf,—who is said to have laid violent hands on himself while labouring under a fit of temporary insanity.

CHARGES ON COFFEE.

Mr. Rudd's announcement, reducing the charge of cleaning coffee to four shillings per cwt. including casks,—deserves particular attention as a boon to the coffee-planters, who have had so many difficulties and discouragements to encounter. Within the last few years the charge was eight shillings per cwt.—and that too when coffee was selling in the London market for 40 and 50 shillings. Competition has, however, gradually reduced it, until we find Mr. Rudd coming forward and offering to do the work for 4s. Mr. Rudd is himself an extensive and most successful coffee-planter, and having had to pay others exorbitantly for the preparation of his own coffee, now that he is, by the establishment of a peeling store in Colombo, independent of agents, probably sympathizes with those planters who are in the position from which he has extricated himself. We have taken pains to inquire, and have ascertained that even 4s. leaves a very handsome profit. If so, how excessive must have been the charges of 8s., 7s. 6d., 7s., &c., which planters were compelled to pay. True it is, the demand and consequent competition that have sprung up for casks, have brought about, as a natural consequence, a reduction in the cost of the article; and probably increased attention to the process of preparation has also slightly diminished the expense. But still the diminution of charge from 8s. to 4s. (and the latter too, be it remarked, leaving a handsome profit), is out of all proportion to the diminution of the actual expenses. If the charge of four shillings now pays handsomely, it may be inferred that at no time was the actual expense so much; but even setting it down at four shillings, coffee-peeling and packing at eight shillings must have been a fine business. Take, for example, 20,000 cwt. of coffee (not a large amount to pass through a merchant's store in Colombo), which would leave a clear profit of 4,000*l.*; not a bad figure in one's books at the end of the year. We know a party who complains that by the reduction of the charge he has lost 3,000*l.* a year. Four shillings a cwt. would alone constitute a large proportion of a fair profit to the planter; and when the circumstances are considered in which very many of this useful class, upon whose prosperity the welfare of a great part of the community mainly depends—with their estates in debt or heavily mortgaged—it is really a matter of public congratulation to witness the relief afforded them by the reduction of the charge for preparing their coffee for shipment. We are not, however, without hope that next year, if not before, the charge will be still further reduced.—Colombo Observer, Dec. 30.

THE COMMISSARIAT.—Capt. Price has been suspended, and Mr. Bernard succeeds him. The postmaster-general, the master attendant, and a military officer, with two sergeants, are appointed to verify the colonial stores in the commissariat—the former to receive 5*s.*, and the latter 2*s.* 6*d.*, a day for the duty. It is not true that Mr. Bernard is going to plead the right, from immemorial custom, of obtaining the rough drafts of the accounts for the purpose of altering them to suit his own views.—Colombo Observer, Dec. 30.

MILITARY CHANGES.—The staff-officerships of Galle and Trincomalie—sinecures that had their origin in the palmy days of Sir Edward Barnes—are to be forthwith abolished; and—cruel fate—Captain McClean will have to return to his duties in the royal artillery.—Ibid.

MR. MCCARTNEY, the superintendent of police, has, we understand, expressed his determination to remonstrate against the abolition of his house allowance (50*l.* a year), as recommended by the committee of the legislative council, and in case of failure, to deprive the colony of his valuable services, by resignation of his appointment.—Colombo Observer, Dec. 30.

THE QUARANTINE LAW.

THE FRIEND OF CHINA enters into an argument upon the means which may be deduced for preventing a recurrence of the horrors of past years. "To sensitive minds the continued mortality every summer is very afflictive; and it was a matter of some surprise that this year there was not a general panic. But the proposed quarantine committee must be men of liberal sentiments—independent—and not likely to gloss over the glaring mismanagement and neglect of those in whose departments remedial measures have remained. The interest which Dr. Bowring exhibited, in his place in the House of Commons, in the winter of 1844, when the quarantine laws were under consideration, and the profound and varied knowledge brought to bear on that important question, are great reasons in support of the proposition that the learned doctor be requested to act as president of such a committee. As members we would indicate the heads of the principal British mercantile establishments in Victoria; say the Hon. Messrs. Jardine and Edger (members of council), Archibald Campbell, T. D. Neave, T. W. L. Mackean, W. P. Livingston, D. Fletcher, W. Davidson, C. J. F. Stuart, G. Lyall, J. G. Morrison, J. Phillips, and W. or A. Scott, Esquires. We have named fourteen, although we think a committee of twelve would be amply sufficient. We have also taken an apparent liberty in mentioning names in this manner; but we do so under the perfect conviction that unless these gentlemen are appointed, (or others of similarly well known independent principles and standing in the colony), the whole commission will fall to the ground. We hope this may not be the case. If Lord Grey trifles with the subject, and writes to Mr. Bonham to name a commission, that gentleman, we fear, judging from precedent, will either tell his lordship that the causes of sickness are found, and that further inquiry is useless, or he will, by accident, name as committee men some of those convenient tools, to be found, we expect, in every British colony: creatures who, to maintain a position, or with a hope of bettering one, will sacrifice every upright and honourable feeling, and, if it were possible, make black, to serve a purpose, appear to be white.

But Mr. Bonham, as Commander-in-Chief, is a party interested, and as remarked by Dr. Bowring on the occasion above referred to:—"All sanitary regulations are turned adrift when very great men are concerned. In such cases who dreams of the public health?" We trust, however, that Lord Grey, or his successor (for we not expect to hear of his lordship retention of his office much longer), will act independently in this matter; and treat this colony, and the public generally, with that impartiality which we have a right to demand."

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

Major Edwardes, in his late work, gives the following account of the Greek ruins of Akra:—

"In the south-west corner of the valley of Bunnoo, within a short distance of the left bank of the Goombeeluh, and about midway between the two towns of Kukkee and Bhurrut, stand a cluster of high mounds, of different sizes and elevations, but undulating one into the other, and evidently parts of a long-ruined whole; indeed, at a little distance, they all seem one, and combine to form a most striking eminence, on a perfectly level plain, which is seen from almost any part of Bunnoo, west of the Khoorrum river. These mounds, when examined, prove to be composed of fragments of burnt bricks and broken tiles, cemented and crushed together by the lapse of ages; and the deep channels, which successive storms and floods have worn down their sides, reveal, here and there, more perfect fragments of old brick-work, and hint that perhaps even halls and chambers might reward the antiquary's deeper search.

"To the north of Akra, a rapid stream, called the Luhuruh, cuts its way through high banks, and rushes into the Goombeeluh; and across this stream, on the right bank, directly opposite the chief mound of Akra, stands a smaller mound, which, to a military eye, looks like an outpost, to command the water. During the first Bunnoo expedition, in 1847, we were encamped here; and General Cortlandt's sappers dug some way into this outward mound, and came, at a considerable depth, to a small circular chamber, made of large and beautifully-burnt bricks, in which there were some human bones, but nothing to give any clue to their history. Rain fell very heavily about the same time, and laid bare a very large quantity of copper coins, which the soldiers amused themselves by picking up, and brought to General Cortlandt and myself. They were generally dreadfully battered and effaced, but on most of them a few Greek and Bactrian letters were very plainly traceable. Some were very perfect indeed, and the raised figures on others, though nearly rubbed level with the surface, could be recognized as corresponding with many better specimens which General Cortlandt had collected in Huzaruh, the Salt Range, and other parts of the Punjab, all over which the Macedonian footsteps are more thickly and ineffaceably trodden in than is, I believe, generally known in England.

"It is a pity that a great and liberal Government, like that of the East-India Company, does not depute some one or more of its scientific servants (such as Capt. Alexander Cunningham, of the Bengal Engineers, whose attention and numismatic knowledge have already been deeply given to the inquiry), to proceed to the Punjab, on the exclusive duty of instituting a regular and scientific search for Greek coins and ruins. Major James Abbott and Lieut. D. Robinson, of the Engineers, both made very extensive and valuable collections of coins in Huzaruh, among which were numerous silver and a few gold ones; and Major Lumsden, the energetic leader of the corps of guides, discovered temples in the Eusofzye country, of which the uninitiated could merely say that they were 'very old and very strange.' What a pity that such treasures as these, and others, like Akra in Bunnoo, whether Greek or Buddhist, of the Mede, Parthian, or Elamite, should lie at our feet, as full of meaning as the obelisks of Egypt, and not, like them, be forced to give up their secret!

"But to return to Akra. Three or four miles from Kukkee, stands Bhurrut, a considerable walled town on the left bank of the Luhuruh, and remarkable at once from being built of brick. All the other towns of Bunnoo are made of mud; and so would Bhurrut probably have been, had not the ruins of the old Greek city hard by supplied the people with most excellent burnt bricks, the evident antiquity of which have [has] given rise to a belief among the Hindoos that the founder of this town was Bhurrut, the brother of Rám, and son of Rajah Jusrut, so famous in Hindoo mythology. In this amusing belief, they are only confirmed by the Greek inscriptions on the coins found about the mounds of Akra, which they denominate Seetee Rám Ké paísé, or, 'the halfpence of Seetee and Rám;' arguing, both with reference and reverence to the Greek, that it is not to be supposed that the brother of Rám would either talk or write common Hindee! By a perverse coincidence, even the equidistant town of Kukkee contributes a link in the proof of the Hindoos; for this, they say, was the name of Bhurrut's mother! Many a strange antiquary has gone mad for less than this, and I trust that the reader will be so content with it as not to regret I have no other 'theory' to offer. All that I venture to contend for is, that the ruins are Greek, or rather Græco-Bactrian. The coins put that much beyond a doubt. The Grecian outline of the features, however cankered, cannot be mistaken.

They belong to the countrymen of Alexander, and the freedom of the designs and high relief, to a period when art was in perfection. Nor would it be altogether so whimsical as the conjectures of our Hindu friends, if I were to hint (nothing more) that the very name of 'Akra' may be only the time-battered ruin of ακρος, 'a hill.' It is, indeed, the only eminence on the unbroken plain of Bunnoo, and might well have been honoured by the conquerors with the distinguishing title of the hill.

"On the present occasion (February 28th, 1848), while General Cortlandt and myself were standing on the top of the chief mound of Akra, the workmen, who were digging for bricks, turned up a large cylindrical clay draining-tile, about a foot long, and ten or twelve inches in circumference, with a neck at one end, so as to fit into the next tile, exactly as is practised at the present day among ourselves. Yet this tile was probably two thousand years old.

"Without wishing to force the incident into the service of any theory, or put any strained construction on it whatever, I will merely mention that the Bunnoochee peasant may at this day be seen standing on the ruins of Akra with his feet encased in buskins exactly resembling the foot of the long Greek boot, 'cothurnus.' The sole is of the same shape, the thongs over the instep are crossed in the same pattern, and the toes of the wearer are thrust through in the self-same manner as we see in any ancient statue. I was told that the same is common to all the peasants of Afghanistan, and I have since seen it myself in other tribes besides those of Bunnoo; but this in no way detracted from the interest I felt on first seeing such a shoe moving about on such a spot."

The original preface to the Shwooh Wan Kiai-tsz', or Chinese Etymologicon, by Hu Shin Shuh-chung, gives the following as the traditional account of the invention of writing:—

"In ancient times, Fuh-hi's royal sway extended over all beneath the heavens. Directing his attention upwards, he surveyed the images in the heavens. Then turning downwards, he surveyed the forms on the earth, carefully observing the figures upon birds and beasts, and the things peculiar to the earth: here, in his own person, selecting what was remarkable; there, what was so in others. In this manner he was able to invent the eight diagrams for a system of changes, and to evolve a scale of magisterial rules.

"Passing down to the time of the Divine Husbandman, we first find that cords were tied into knots, in order to record the acts of the government; and thus its affairs were grouped together. These, being exceedingly numerous, gave rise to forgeries and deceptions.

"It was at this time that Ts'ángkieh, a minister of the Yellow Emperor, by observing the footsteps of various birds and beasts, ascertained that by lines objects could be distinguished one from another. Thus he invented writing for the purpose of forming contracts; and hence every kind of work was carried on in due form, and every order and engagement properly defined. The clue that led to this invention he obtained by an inspection of the diagram, inundation signifying, by interpretation, 'proclaimed in the imperial courts,' i.e. by means of written characters instruction is proclaimed, and the principles of knowledge are made known in the king's courts; and thus, while conferring emoluments upon their inferiors, the princes will be careful to preserve their own virtues.

"When Ts'ángkieh invented his system of writing, he did it by drawing the images of various species, and hence he called them wan, figures. Afterwards, by writing form and sound, he augmented their number, and these new ones he called tsz, or characters, meaning by this term that they became numerous from being recombined and nourished. But when characters came to be etched upon bamboos and the bark of trees, this was called shu, or writing, i.e. giving a likeness of the objects described.

"During the ages that elapsed under the five emperors and the three families of kings, the form of the written characters underwent numerous alterations. For example, in the inaugural inscriptions found upon the tablets erected on the Great Mountain by the seventy-two sovereigns who went thither to record their names, none are precisely alike."

M. E. Lancereau is preparing a French translation of the Panchatantra, from the Sanscrit text recently published at Bonn by M. Kosegarten. The work will be accompanied by a Dissertation, historical and literary, upon the various imitations of this celebrated Indian collection, discovered by him in his researches amongst European writers of the middle age, and the fabulists of the 14th to the 17th centuries.

The Calcutta Morning Chronicle informs us that a relay of mail coaches, built after the English fashion, with some few alterations to adapt them to this country, are being manufactured by a Calcutta builder, and will be shortly started between Calcutta and Benares.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

TUESDAY, February 18, 1851.

THE Parliamentary campaign has opened fiercely. Two stout party-battles have been already fought, in one of which the Ministers have achieved a signal triumph; in the other, their victory too nearly resembles that of King Pyrrhus to supply matter of exultation to them, or of congratulation to their friends and supporters. These different results are easily explained or accounted for.

In the Queen's Speech, the Papal aggression, as it is now generally termed, was prominently mentioned, and the two Houses were invited to devise some measure for repressing it. In their addresses in answer to the speech of her Majesty, both Houses promised to do so; and, in fulfilment of this pledge, in the Lower House of Parliament, the First Minister of the Crown moved for leave to introduce a Bill to prevent the assumption of certain ecclesiastical titles. It very rarely happens that such a motion, made by a member of the Government, is resisted; still rarer is it, and less could resistance be expected, when the motion was but a compliance with the desire expressed on the part of the Crown, and a promise given by the House itself, and moreover after a large majority of the nation had so unequivocally signified its opinion that some measure of the kind should be introduced. Roman Catholics might naturally dislike any limitation put upon the means of developing their religious system,—though some are not averse to the imposition of restraints upon an organisation not favourable to the interests of the laity and secondary clergy; but even Roman Catholics might reasonably suspend their opposition until the measure, in a distinct and definite shape, was before them. It is not wonderful, therefore, that, in a House of 458 members, only 63 should have refused their assent to the mere introduction of a Bill, these 63 members consisting chiefly of Irish Roman Catholics, who regard such a measure as uncalled for and retrogressive as respects Ireland, along with a few English members, who consider it as an attack upon civil and religious liberty,—a phrase of somewhat ambiguous import, having a different meaning in different mouths.

The real conflict will take place when the merits of the particular measure come on for discussion; it will then be sure to provoke the most discordant objections, and perhaps unite some who think it goes too far and others who think it does not go far enough with those who desire no measure at all upon the subject.

Mr. Disraeli's motion, for the House of Commons to resolve that it is the duty of the Government to introduce without delay effectual measures for the relief of the distress admitted in her Majesty's Speech to exist amongst the owners and occupiers of land, out of a House of 552 members, missed being carried only by 14 votes, and this small majority, it is said, was not obtained without vigorous efforts on the part of the ministerial agents. The opinions of the members absent from the House are supposed to be pretty nearly in equilibrio; so that it would appear that a very slight secession from the ministerial ranks to those of their opponents would have placed the Government in a minority regarding a question of vital moment to them, and upon which their retention of office necessarily depends.

The unfavourable result of this motion is as easily explicable as the opposite result of the former; and here, again, the Irish Roman Catholic members supply a clue to the explanation. Seven Irish members, all or most of them Roman Catholics, who voted in support of the Ministers last year, when a similar motion was brought forward by Mr. Disraeli (which was negatived by a majority of 21), voted against them upon the late occasion. A tolerably distinct intimation was given to the Ministers by an Irish Roman Catholic member, on Friday night, in the Papal Aggression debate, of what might occur if the ministerial measure upon that subject be persevered in. Mr. W. Fagan, member for the city of Cork, told the Ministers that he had voted for them upon Mr. Disraeli's motion,

"Though he knew full well that, in consequence of strong indignation which existed against the noble lord, he ran the risk of having that vote misrepresented, and his popularity diminished. But though he had so voted last night, there might from the other side, where the words 'Up, guards, and at them,' had already been uttered, be promulgated in a few days some proposition which hon. gentlemen on his side of the House could conscientiously support, and then, if the noble lord persisted in his course of oppression, he would see them arrayed against him. He would never do evil that good might come; but if he could conscientiously refuse his support to Government, he certainly would vote against them."

It follows, that the Government cannot safely reckon upon the aid of its Irish allies; that the Ecclesiastical Titles bill threatens to dissolve the weak cement which has for some time imperfectly united them. The Protectionist party is strong and bold, and Mr. Fagan's not obscure hint seems to foreshadow a series of motions on their part, skilfully prepared, so as to combine and concentrate forces, in some respects antagonistical, in one common assault upon the present Ministers, in order to eject them from their posts.

Should this operation succeed,—which is not very probable,—the consequences will be prejudicial to the public interests. The altered policy that will of necessity follow must be diametrically opposed to the present. Our foreign relations, our foreign commerce, national credit, mercantile confidence, will, for a time at least, be disturbed. A dissolution of Parliament will convulse the country, for one of the chief points upon which the elections will turn is of a character which gives to acrimony the semblance of virtue, and renders moderation and forbearance almost impossible.

Not the least important incident of a change of the Administration is the effect it may exert upon the interests of India. The President of the Board of Control has announced that it is not the intention of the present Government to move for the appointment of a Select Committee upon East-India affairs, and, in terms almost equally explicit, that the mode in which those affairs are administered will undergo no material change. Another Cabinet may entertain different views upon this important question, and a general election may, as upon the last occasion, give birth to a clamour respecting it, which may embarrass the deliberations, and perhaps warp the judgment, of Parliament.

THE valedictory address of Sir Charles Napier to the officers of the Indian Army has been complained of in some quarters as couched in terms unnecessarily severe, and denounced in others as a gratuitous insult to the army;—groundless when applied to a “large” portion of its officers, all of whom (it is alleged) it tends to involve in a disgrace which should fall upon only a few, and even where the charge is as “largely” applicable as it is made, its publication, it is said, was superfluous and unjustifiable. Let us see what is the nature of the charge.

The late Commander-in-Chief states that the misconduct of certain officers of the Indian army, not inordinate in number compared with the magnitude of that army, but still so large as to demand repression with a strong hand, is of a nature not only discreditable to their regiments and ruinous to themselves, but to reflect disgrace upon the profession itself. He adduces, as evidence in support of this serious accusation, complaints made by brigadiers respecting the debts of officers, one of whom tells him that, at a Court of Requests, “there were fifty-three cases, all, except four, of trifling amount, against subalterns;” and that “the efficiency of the officers is seriously affected by their pecuniary embarrassments.” Another brigadier informs him of an officer who “enjoys champagne tiffins, leaving his servants to drag him before the Court for their just claims.” A commanding officer writes, that “the numerous cases brought monthly before the Courts of Requests is a disgrace to the army we belong to.” These statements,—as well as others which he tells us he could publish, and which “would shock every honest and honourable man,”—Sir Charles says, were forwarded to him, “uninvited, from men of high rank in both the Queen’s and Company’s services,” formally, as official complaints. They are corroborated by a private authority, not to be suspected of partiality towards the late Commander-in-Chief, who asserts that “the personal liabilities of the British officers in India to their various creditors exceed 1,000,000*l.* sterling,” and that “four-fifths of our subalterns are in debt.”

This is the nature of the charge, and this is the evidence in support of it. Surely, here is a dignus vindicæ nodus. The retiring Commander-in-Chief could not have omitted, without gross dereliction of duty, some notice of such a state of things: the next question is, can the notice be deemed irregular or too strong?

A General Order seems to us the most regular and proper mode in which such a subject could be brought before the army, especially as it is accompanied by suggestions as to the causes of the evil and the true remedy. The causes, according to Sir Charles, are extravagance of living, the indulgence in superfluous expenses. The Bombay journalist is more specific; he adds to “champagne tiffins,” horse-racing, gambling, balls and dinners on a scale met with at home only amongst the nobility, house-rents and equipage double or treble what can be afforded. The remedy is, not parsimony, but economy. “I know,” says Sir Charles, “that every ensign in India can live well on his pay, and that many, who have never appeared before a court of requests, have largely assisted their families.” The Bombay paper, again, says, “that these things are not the result of low pay, is evident from the fact that young civilians, who receive twice or thrice as much as young soldiers, get just so much the more deeply and rapidly entangled; whereas large bodies of non-commissioned officers make money from their pay.”

Why then, we say, whatever exceptions may be taken to certain terms or expressions in the Order, it is a wholesome and necessary castigation, which can hardly touch those who have not offended in this particular; and is not a whit too severe towards men whose conduct “reflects disgrace upon their uniform.” The discrimination which it was impossible for Sir Charles Napier to employ, without publishing the names of parties, may easily be made in every corps in India.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FEB. 10.

The East-India Company.—In reply to a question by Lord Jocelyn.

Sir J. Hobhouse said, her Majesty’s Government had no intention to move for the appointment of a Select Committee on East-India affairs; and that, if any material changes were contemplated in the system under which those affairs were at present administered, timely notice would be given.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CULTIVATION OF COTTON IN CEYLON.—Extract from Sir J. E. Tennent’s Report on the Finance and Commerce of Ceylon, dated 22nd Oct. 1846: “With the exception of a small quantity of cotton used for stuffing pillows and cushions, and woven into coarse cloth in the north of the island, the entire consumption of Ceylon is imported from abroad, although Mr. Finnie, one of the American cotton-planters, who is now in the service of the East-India Company, with a view to the improvement of the production in Hindostan, and who lately visited Ceylon, has written to me to say that in every essential,—in soil, temperature, and climate,—this island is calculated to produce cotton equal in quality and cheaper in price than that of the United States. His words are, ‘I am of opinion, from what I saw of the climate and soil, that Ceylon will produce the article of cotton equally well; and when the comparatively small amount of capital required is considered, I doubt not it may even produce the article cheaper than we can in America, where a large sum must be laid out at once for labour, and where the expense of food and clothing is much greater than the imported labour of Ceylon costs, besides the risk of losing the labourers by death after they are purchased.’ I have reason, however, to apprehend that this confidence of Mr. Finnie is over-sanguine, and that his observations apply strictly to only a portion of the island,—but a very considerable one.” Extract of a despatch from Sir J. E. Tennent, administering the government, to Earl Grey, dated Colombo, 10th May, 1847: “The cultivation of this article has hitherto been very limited, and confined almost exclusively to the northern parts of the island, where there is reason to fear that the most suitable soils were not selected, nor the most approved details of cultivation adopted. But now the success of the great cotton experiment of the East-India Company has been pretty well established in several parts of their possessions, and when the consumers of cotton in England are looking to the East for a more certain supply than that which foreign countries afford, the cultivation in Ceylon offers a fair field for agricultural industry. Dr. Gardener, the able superintendent of the Ceylon Botanical Gardens (who has seen much of cotton cultivation, both in the northern provinces of Brazil and in different parts of India), and who lately visited the northern and eastern portions of Ceylon, has stated, in some remarks which he has published on the subject, that there are large tracts in that part of the island called the ‘Wanny,’ which he believes to be admirably adapted to the production of cotton.”

EMIR BESCHIR, the “Prince of the Mountains,” died lately at Constantinople. For fifty years he played a prominent part in the affairs of Syria. Since the loss of his power, he had been living on a handsome pension granted to him by the Sultan. Only a few days before his death, his eldest son, Halil, and his youngest son, Emin, who had embraced Mahometanism, both expired.

MAJOR JAMES CHICHELEY PLOWDEN, 17th Regiment Bengal N.I., has received diploma of his election as Associate to the Institution of Civil Engineers.

THE ADDERLEY CHAIR.—"This interesting specimen of colonial skill," says the Graham Town Journal, "has been forwarded to the hon. member who so manfully asserted our rights in the convict struggle. We believe it is to be placed in the Great Exhibition of 1851, by permission of Mr. Adderley, and will there be of much service, in showing that our African woods are capable of standing both the carver's tool and of receiving the finest polish. The chair reflects great credit upon all concerned in its manufacture, and will doubtless be received by Mr. Adderley with no ordinary feeling of gratification."

Native Christians in Calcutta have commenced the publication of a weekly newspaper, in Bengali, entitled Sambad Sudhansu, or, "The Messenger of Nectar," which, whilst it advocates European notions, has no sympathy with the class called "Young Bengal," and does not repudiate the ancient literature of the country.

The Buddhists of Burmah, in conformity with the doctrine of metempsychosis, believe, when an infant cries or moans, it came from the region of torment, and remembered the misery it had endured; and that when one laughed and crowed, it had arrived from the region of bliss, and rejoiced in the recollection of its felicity.

James Stuart, Esq.	James Jos. Mackenzie, Esq.
Medical Officer—John Grant, Esq.	Apothecary-General.
Bankers—Bank of Bengal.	Solicitors—Messrs. Frith & Sandes.

This Society offers a lower and more economical scale of Premiums for Life Assurance than hitherto demanded by the established Offices in India.

Annual Premium for assuring 1,000 rupees:—

CIVIL.			MILITARY AND NAVAL.
Age.	With Profits.	Without Profits.	Age.	With Profits.	Without Profits.
20	Rs. 33	Rs. 31	20	Rs. 38	Rs. 35
30	38	35	30	44	41
40	49	45	40	53	49
50	63	59	50	66	61
60	82	77	60	84	79

All holders of Policies in India on the Profit scale, who may have paid five annual premiums, will be entitled, at the expiration of the fifth year, to a year's profit, calculated on the average of the preceding five years; such profit to be paid in cash, or to go in diminution of the future premiums payable, or to be added to the sum assured by the policy, at the option of the holder, after the calculation of the profits shall have been made in London.

After the expiration of 1851, the profits will be declared annually, and the payers of five complete annual premiums be regularly entitled to a participation therein, with a like option as to the mode of application.

Parties assured in India for Life shall, on their return to England for a permanence, and on the first half-yearly premium becoming due, be entitled to come upon the English rates of premium, and be placed under the rules and conditions of the Society there obtaining.

All parties assured for Life, or for terms other than for Life, whatever the number of payments, or the permanency or otherwise of their residence in Europe, shall, after completing a full year from the date of their quitting India, and on the first half-yearly premium thereafter becoming due, be entitled to a reduction of their premium to the English rates, such reduced rates being continued during their further residence in Europe.

Notices of Assignments of Policies will be duly registered at the Office of the Secretaries.

The Society also grants ENDOWMENTS and DEFERRED ANNUITIES for India, the Tables for which, with full information, may be had at the Office of the Family Endowment Society, No. 12, Chatham Place; or at the Office of the Secretaries in Calcutta, Messrs. GORDON, STUART, and Co.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 9th of May, 1849, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums. This will be found a liberal reduction if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premiums.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year

At the ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of this Society, held on Thursday, the 28th day of November, 1850,

BENJAMIN PHILLIPS, Esq., F.R.S., in the Chair,

The accounts for the ninth year of the Society's business ending the 30th September, 1850, and the Report of the Auditors thereon, having been read and duly received, the following Report of the Directors was also read:—

REPORT.

"The Directors are happy to have it in their power to inform the Shareholders, that the financial year ending the 30th September, 1850, has furnished the most satisfactory results which they have yet had to lay before the Shareholders, whether as regards the amount of new business done, or the extent of losses incurred.

"During the year ending the 30th September, 1850, there have been issued no fewer than 599 policies for assurances, amounting to 213,469l. 16s. 11d., and yielding an annual revenue, on the new policies thus effected, of 9,163l. 13s. 7d.

"This exceeds the amount of business transacted by this office in any former year, not only in the number of policies, and the sums assured by those policies, but also in the yearly premiums payable upon them.

"The following table shows the results of the business transacted in each year since the establishment of the Society:—

YEAR.	Number of New Policies issued in each Year.	Sums Assured by New Policies in each Year.	Annual Premiums payable on New Policies in each Year.
1842	130	£55,245 1 0	£1,882 13 7
1843	208	87,830 16 11	4,992 18 6
1844	197	80,415 8 6	4,120 4 3
1845	258	103,014 11 0	5,563 17 0
1846	199	83,700 14 5	4,985 8 5
1847	313	113,542 4 8	4,237 3 4
1848	412	124,458 17 9	4,980 2 8
1849	475	201,712 15 6	7,496 0 6
1850	599	213,469 16 11	9,163 13 7
Total.	2,761	£1,063,390 6 8	£47,422 1 6

"It is plain from this statement, that in the course of a very few years, the Society has acquired a very large amount of business, equalled by few of the Assurance Companies in the metropolis.

"The Directors wish to impress on the Shareholders the important fact that this rapid acquisition of business is not owing to any accidental cause, but has taken place uniformly throughout the whole field of the Society's operations, showing clearly the confidence reposed in the Society by the Public.

"It is also most gratifying to be able to report that the losses by deaths during the past year have been less than in any preceding year since 1844; from which it appears that, with the exception of the three first years of the Society, when the number of policies in force was not one-fourth of the present number, the mortality has been less than in any other.

"The Directors have only further to state, that the Members of the Board going out of office by rotation are Edward Doubleday, Esq., and Robert Bentley Todd, M.D.; and the Auditors also going out of office by rotation are James Parker Deane, D.C.L., and Martial Lawrence Welch, Esq., all of whom, being eligible, offer themselves for re-election.

"The Directors and Auditors retiring from office having been duly re-elected without opposition, the usual votes of thanks were given."

Prospectuses, containing very full tables of rates, forms of proposal, and every other information, will be forwarded, postage free, on application to any of the Society's Agents, or to the Secretary, at the chief office, 25, Pall Mall.

INTERESTING FACT.—The following singular and authentic case of restoration of the human hair is worthy of observation, more particularly as it relates to an article of high and universal repute during the last half century. Mr. A. Herrmann, of Queen Street, Soho, had been quite bald for some time past, and had tried various preparations for the recovery of his hair, but without any beneficial result. He was then induced to try the effects of "Rowland's Macassar Oil," and after daily applying it for about two months, he, much to his gratification, had his hair quite restored, and now possesses a beautiful head of hair. The fact speaks too strongly for itself to require comment.—Bell's Weekly Messenger.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL is highly and universally appreciated for creating and sustaining luxuriant tresses.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR is a preparation of unparalleled efficacy in improving and beautifying the skin and complexion; and

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, is invaluable for its beautifying and preservative effects on the teeth and gums.

* * BEWARE OF SPURIOUS IMITATIONS.—The only genuine of each bears the name of "ROWLAND'S," preceding that of the article, on the wrapper or label. Sold by them at 20, Hatton Garden, London; and by chemists and perfumers.

HINDUSTANI WORKS BY JOHN SHAKESPEAR, Esq.

NEW EDITION, with GREAT ADDITIONS.

This Day is published, the 4th Edition, in 1 vol. 4to. price £3. 5s. in boards, SHAKESPEAR'S HINDUSTANI and ENGLISH DICTIONARY, GREATLY ENLARGED: to which is added, a DICTIONARY, ENGLISH and HINDUSTANI, ENTIRELY NEW.

•• To the First Part of this Dictionary, the author has, by laborious study of Hindustani works, both printed and manuscript, made the most extensive additions. In the Hindustani and English Part, the Hindustani words are printed in their proper characters, together with the pronunciation in Roman letters. The Derivatives, which are traced from the Sanskrit, Arabic, Hebrew, Persian, and Greek, are given respectively in the character peculiar to each of those languages.

The Second Part, English and Hindustani, is ENTIRELY NEW. It comprises the most common English words, and also numerous usual phrases, with the fittest corresponding translations into Hindustani.

REVIEW IN "TIMES," Jan. 3.—"Much attention has been paid to the collecting of scientific terms, especially botanical ones, as well as to the correct rendering them into the technology of Europe." ••• "The Hindustani and English Part of it now contains upwards of 53,000 words and phrases explained, being 7,000 more than in the last edition, and 11,000 more than in any other Dictionary of the like description now extant." ••• "In India, as well as in Europe, the character of this work has long been fully established, and the present edition will greatly enhance its reputation."

5th Edition, 1 vol. royal 8vo. price 14s.

A GRAMMAR of the HINDUSTANI LANGUAGE. To which is added, a short Grammar of the Dakhnii.

1 vol. royal 8vo. price £1. 10s.

AN INTRODUCTION to the HINDUSTANI LANGUAGE. Designed especially for those who have no Instructor.

In 2 vols. 4to. price £1. 16s.

MUNTAKHABAT-I-HINDI; or, SELECTIONS in HINDUSTANI. With a verbal translation and grammatical analysis of some parts, for the use of Students of that language.

VARICOSE VEINS, WEAKNESS, FRACTURES, SPRAINS, &c.

HUXLEY'S SURGICAL CAOUTCHOUC ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE-CAPS, &c. are now daily patronized by all the leading members of the profession. Their superiority over every other fabric for artificial support is admitted by all who inspect them. They afford an equal, comforting, and permanent pressure on every portion of the limb, and are drawn on with the facility of an ordinary stocking. H. and Co. guarantee a comfort and support hitherto unknown in any other form of bandage. It is well known that all kinds of Surgical Stockings lately used have a tendency to impede the free and healthy action of the muscles, thereby producing relaxation and great diminution of the limb. Only to be obtained at HUXLEY'S Parisian Shirt Warehouse, 5, Vere Street, Cavendish Square.

KIDSTON'S MECHANICAL LEECH.

WM. KIDSTON and Co., 18, Bishopsgate Street Without, London, in directing the attention of the medical profession to their newly-invented instrument, termed "Kidston's Mechanical Leech," think it would be superfluous and presumptuous to make any comment in its behalf, further than drawing their attention to the testimonials in its favour, published in the "Lancet" of September 28, and in the Pharmaceutical Journal for October.

Full instructions for use will accompany the instruments. Price per set of instruments, —i.e. three "Leeches," or Vacuum Glasses, with Puncturing Instrument electro plated, in neat morocco case, complete, —£2. 5s.

HOME FOR YOUNG CHILDREN.

A LADY from INDIA is desirous to recommend an establishment in which she has placed three young children, and in which there is accommodation for three or four others. This limited establishment is conducted by two ladies, residing with their widowed mother, and combines the easy discipline of a school with the comforts of a parent's house. It is situated in a very pleasant and healthy locality in Devonshire, contiguous to one of its chief towns. Satisfactory references kindly permitted.

Address, L. O., to the care of Mr. Balle, Bookseller, High Street, Exeter.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS AGAIN

SUCCESSFUL IN THE CURE OF A BAD LEG.—Extract of a letter from Mr. Brotherton, of Stangrati, near Bootle, Jan. 15, 1851:—"To Professor Holloway. Sir,—After my wife's confinement in 1848, she caught a severe cold, which settled in her right leg and foot, causing it to swell to an alarming size, ultimately forming into about twenty wounds, presenting a most fearful appearance. The pain she endured was almost insupportable, and the treatment of her medical attendants did no good whatever. She therefore resolved to give your Pills and Ointment a trial, and I am happy to say they have effected a perfect cure."

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

THE SUPERINTENDENCE of Outfits of every kind, securing Passages, shipping and insuring Baggage and Goods of every description, for all persons proceeding to India, or other part of the East, either by the Overland Route, via Marseilles or Southampton, or by the Sea Voyage.

THE RECEIPT of Letters from or for India or elsewhere, and their transmission by the first opportunity.

THE DESPATCH, from our London Offices of Parcels, for all parts of India, China, Ceylon, &c., by the Overland Route, on the 17th of each month; as well as the clearing and forwarding from Southampton of Passengers, Baggage, and Parcels, arriving home by the Steamers.

THE EXECUTION, on the best terms, of Orders of every description from India, especially those for Wines and Spirits, of which they keep in their Cellars a choice collection of every variety, expressly for their Indian Customers.

THE RECEPTION of the Wives and Children of Civil and Military Officers arriving from India, the Clearance of their Baggage, and its despatch to their destinations, and the placing of Children at Schools, whereat, according to the instructions and wishes of their Parents, the best education and training will be secured to them. The Receipt of Remittances for them while at home, and payment of Bills on their account.

THE RECEIPT also of Civil and Military Pay, Pensions, Annuities, Dividends, &c., by Power of Attorney; with the Execution of any other Business at the India House, Bank of England, or elsewhere.

Drafts and Letters of Credit on Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, granted for large or small sums.

Remittances, or reference for payment, will be necessary from those who have no open account with them.

136, LEADENHALL STREET.

We have taken into partnership Mr. JAMES CUNDY, late of the Madras Army.

In thus having secured the services of a gentleman who, by long residence in India, has gained considerable practical knowledge, we feel that we have best consulted the interests of our old friends, and, we hope, show good reason for an accession of new.

On personal application at our office, or on inquiry by letter, every information and assistance will be given to parties arriving from or intending to embark for India, China, and the Colonies, and constituents in England will have prompt attention paid to their wishes, and will find in the Reading-room the latest newspapers, as well as every information they may require on all topics relating to India.

Detailed Estimates of Outfits for Writers, Cadets, and Assistant-Surgeons have been prepared with much care, showing the comparative expense between a journey overland, egypt, India, and a voyage by the long sea route.

Drafts and Letters of Credit on Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, and China, in large or small sums, are also granted at this Agency.

JAMES BARBER and Co.

EAST-INDIA UNITED SERVICE AGENCY,
53, CHARING CROSS, and 25, SPRING GARDENS.

MAJOR R. D. WHITE (twenty-nine years in the Bengal Army) will be happy to receive gentlemen connected with India and the Colonies, or attend to their written communications.

Passages secured by Sea or overland; Houses or Apartments engaged; Regimental Messes; Wines and Stores; Outfits, &c., supplied; and every description of Agency business transacted.

No charge for subscription to the Agency or Rooms, but every information furnished.

EMIGRATION and COLONIZATION.

IMMIGRATION being much required in AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, &c., and as the supposed expense of an OUTFIT often prevents individuals emigrating, S. W. SILVER and Co., CLOTHIERS, OUTFITTERS, and CONTRACTORS (having a large interest to maintain in those Colonies), have been advised to make known that they can supply a comfortable OUTFIT, including Bedding, for MALE or FEMALE Emigrants, from Four Pounds (net) upwards, or less (Two Pounds if needful), and for Children in proportion, at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN (opposite the London Tavern), where lists will be given on application.

S. W. S. & Co., being the makers of nearly every article in all the Outfits they supply, and as one of their objects is to promote EMIGRATION, they neither receive from Agents, or pay the too usual commission to any person introducing Passengers to be fitted out, so that the Passage and Outfit may be procured at the least possible expense; but they will, on application, advise Passengers how to obtain the most economic passage to the Colonies. They have a representative in every Australian Colony, to whom they ship Clothing monthly; thus they would forward small parcels free of expense.

NAVAL and MILITARY OFFICERS, MIDSHIPMEN, CADETS, CIVILIANS, LADIES, &c., are outfitted as heretofore, at the CABIN-PASSENGER OUTFITTING Warehouse, Nos. 66 and 67, CORNHILL (the Emigration Outfitting being exclusively at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN), LONDON, and each branch at ST. GEORGE'S CRESCENT, LIVERPOOL.

THE HAND-BEDSTEAD FOR CADETS, weight 17 lbs.

BESEMERES and SONS, CLOTHIERS, OUTFITTERS, and Ready-made Linen Warehousemen, invite overland travellers to India to inspect this PORTABLE BEDSTEAD, price 12s. 6d., invented and made only by them. Although so light, it is strong, compact, of full size, and may be used without a mattress; it passes readily into a bag 6 inches in diameter, 24 long. Bedstead, bedding, blankets, sheets, quilt, &c., packed in one of their Waterproof Regulation Overland Trunks, weight under 50 lbs. Overland Trunks, One Guinea each. Lists of Outfits for Cadets and Assistant-Surgeons, estimates and information of every expense of the passage and journey, forwarded by post. Lists of Linen, priced, may also be had.—Outfitting Warehouses, Nos. 61 to 64, Houndsditch, London.

IMPORTANT FAMILY MEDICINE.

THE GREAT NUMBER OF NEW MEDICINES which have within the last few years been offered to the Public, would have prevented the Proprietor from submitting to their notice this valuable Extract, had not the fullest and most decided evidence of its superiority convinced him that, as far as he could, it was strictly a duty on his part to make it generally known. It is purely Vegetable, being extracted from CAMOMILE FLOWERS; hence, in all cases where the stomach does not rightly perform its office, it is at once the most harmless, pleasant, and efficacious assistant possible.

With the weak, the sickly, and the sedentary, the preventive art of Medicine must be an object worthy of particular attention. The effect of a few doses will fully prove its efficacy; for whether the constitution is naturally bad, whether it has been seriously injured by severe attacks of illness, or by some inferior dilapidating cause, or whether it has been impaired by time or by neglect, the general effect is similar, and, consequently, the repairing and propping up of the system can only be accomplished by invigorating and bringing into proper action the digestive organs, thus preventing the general breaking up of the constitution. The Proprietor, from experience, confidently recommends an occasional dose of this valuable Medicine, being assured of the most happy result, and that the period of life may be extended many years by the use of

NORTON'S CAMOMILE PILLS,

The most certain Preserver of Health;

A MILD, YET SPEEDY, SAFE, AND EFFECTUAL AID IN CASES OF INDIGESTION, AND ALL STOMACH COMPLAINTS,

AND, AS A NATURAL CONSEQUENCE, A PURIFIER OF THE BLOOD & A SWEETENER OF THE WHOLE SYSTEM.

INDIGESTION is a weakness or want of power of the digestive juices in the stomach to convert what we eat and drink into healthy matter, for the proper nourishment of the whole system. It is caused by everything which weakens the system in general, or the stomach in particular. From it proceed nearly all the diseases to which we are liable; for it is very certain that if we could always keep the stomach right, we should only die by old age or accident. Indigestion produces a great variety of unpleasant sensations; amongst the most prominent are a want of, or an inordinate, appetite, sometimes attended with a constant craving for drink, a distension or feeling of enlargement of the stomach, flatulency, heart-burn, or sickness; in some cases of depraved digestion there is a complete disinclination for food, but still the appetite is not greatly impaired, as at the stated period of meals persons so afflicted can eat heartily, although without much gratification; a long train of nervous symptoms are also frequent attendants, general debility, great languidness, and incapacity for exertion. The minds of persons so afflicted frequently become irritable and desponding, and great anxiety is observable in the countenance; they appear under great apprehension of some imaginary danger, will start at any unexpected noise or occurrence, and become so agitated that they require some time to calm and collect themselves: yet the mind is exhilarated without much difficulty; pleasing events, society, will for a time dissipate all appearance of disease; but the excitement produced by an agreeable change vanishes soon after the cause has gone by. Other symptoms are, violent palpitations, restlessness, the sleep disturbed by frightful dreams and startings, and affording little or no refreshment; occasionally there is much moaning, with a sense of weight and oppression upon the chest, night-mare, &c.

It is almost impossible to enumerate all the symptoms of this first invader upon the constitution, as in a hundred cases of indigestion there will probably be something peculiar to each; but, be they what they may, they are all occasioned by the food becoming a burthen rather than a support to the stomach; and in all its stages the medicine most wanted is that which will afford effectual assistance to the digestive organs, and give energy to the nervous and muscular systems,—nothing can more speedily or with more certainty effect so desirable an object than NORTON'S EXTRACT OF CAMOMILE FLOWERS. The herb has from time immemorial been highly esteemed in England as a grateful anodyne, imparting an aromatic bitter to the taste, and a pleasing degree of warmth and strength to the stomach; and in all cases of indigestion, gout in the stomach, windy cholice, and general weakness, it has for ages been strongly recommended by the most eminent practitioners as very useful and beneficial. The great, indeed only, objection to their use has been the large quantity of water which it takes to dissolve a small part of the flowers, and which must be taken with it into the stomach. It requires a quarter of a pint of boiling water to dissolve the soluble portion of one drachm of camomile flowers; and, when one or even two ounces may be taken with advantage, it must at once be seen how impossible it is to take a proper dose of this wholesome herb in the form of tea; and the only reason why it has not long since been placed the very first in rank of all restorative medicines is, that in taking it the stomach has always been loaded with water, which tends in a great measure to counteract, and very frequently wholly to destroy, the effect. It must be evident that loading a weak stomach with a large quantity of water, merely for the purpose of conveying into it a small quantity of medicine, must be injurious; and that the medicine must possess powerful renovating properties only to counteract the bad effects likely to be produced by the water. Generally speaking, this has been the case with camomile flowers,—a herb possessing the highest restorative qualities, and, when properly taken, decidedly the most speedy restorer, and the most certain preserver of health.

These PILLS are wholly CAMOMILE, prepared by a peculiar process, accidentally discovered, and known only to the proprietor, and which he firmly believes to be one of the most valuable modern discoveries in medicine, by which all the essential and extractive matter of more than an ounce of the flowers is concentrated in four moderate-sized pills. Experience has afforded the most ample proof that they possess all the fine aromatic and stomachic properties for which the herb has been esteemed; and as they are taken into the stomach unencumbered by any diluting or indigestible substance, in the same degree has their benefit been more immediate and decided. Mild in their operation, and pleasant in their effect, they may be taken at any age, and under any circumstance, without danger or inconvenience; a person exposed to cold and wet a whole day or night could not possibly receive any injury from taking them, but, on the contrary, they would effectually prevent a cold being taken. After a long acquaintance with, and strict observance of, the medicinal properties of NORTON'S CAMOMILE PILLS, it is only doing them justice to say, that they are really the most valuable of all Tonic Medicines. By the word tonic is meant a medicine which gives strength to the stomach sufficient to digest in proper quantities all wholesome food, which increases the power of every nerve and muscle of the human body, or, in other words, invigorates the nervous and muscular systems. The solidity or firmness of the whole tissue of the body which so quickly follows the use of NORTON'S CAMOMILE PILLS, their certain and speedy effects in repairing the partial dilapidations from time or intemperance, and their lasting salutary influence on the whole frame is most convincing, that in the smallest compass is contained the largest quantity of the tonic principle, of so peculiar a nature as to pervade the whole system, through which it diffuses health and strength.

As NORTON'S CAMOMILE PILLS are particularly recommended for all stomach complaints or indigestion, it will probably be expected that some advice should be given respecting diet; though after all that has been written upon the subject, after the publication of volume upon volume, after the country has, as it were, been inundated with practical essays on diet, as a means of prolonging life, it would be unnecessary to say more, did we not feel it our duty to make the humble endeavour of inducing the public to regard them not, but to adopt that course which is dictated by nature, by reason, and by common sense. Those persons who study the wholesomeness, and are governed by the opinions of writers on diet, are uniformly to be found in a body and weak in mind. There can be no doubt that the palate is designed to inform us what is proper for the stomach, and of course that must best instruct us what food to take, and what to avoid: we want no other adviser. Nothing can be more clear than that those articles which are agreeable to the taste were by nature intended for our food and sustenance, whether liquid or solid, foreign or of native production; if they are pure and unadulterated, no harm need be dreaded by their use; they will only injure by abuse. Consequently, whatever the palate approves, eat and drink, always in moderation, but never in excess; keeping in mind that the first process of digestion is performed in the mouth, the second in the stomach; and that, in order that the stomach may be able to do its work properly, it is requisite that the first process should be well performed; this consists in masticating or chewing the solid food, so as to break down and separate the fibres and small substances of meat and vegetables, mixing them well, and blending the whole together before they are swallowed; and it is particularly urged upon all to take plenty of time to their meals, and never to eat in haste. If you conform to this short and simple, but comprehensive advice, and find that there are various things which others eat and drink with pleasure, and without inconvenience, and which would be pleasant to yourself, only that they disagree, you may at once conclude that the fault is in the stomach; that it does not possess the power which it ought to do; that it wants assistance, and the sooner that assistance is afforded the better. A very short trial of this medicine will best prove how soon it will put the stomach in a condition to perform with ease all the work which nature intended for it. By its use you will soon be able to enjoy, in moderation, whatever is agreeable to the taste, and unable to name one individual article of food which disagrees with or sits unpleasantly on the stomach. Never forget that a small meal well digested affords more nourishment to the system than a large one, even of the same food, when digested imperfectly. Let the dish be ever so delicious, ever so enticing a variety offered, the bottle ever so enchanting, never forget that temperance tends to preserve health, and that health is the soul of enjoyment. But should an impropriety be at any time committed, by which the stomach becomes overloaded or disordered, render it immediate aid by taking a dose of NORTON'S CAMOMILE PILLS, which will so promptly assist in carrying off the burden thus imposed upon it, that all will soon be right again.

On account of their volatile properties, they must be kept in bottles; and if closely corked, their qualities are neither impaired by time nor injured by any change of climate whatever. Sold by all Medicine Vendors, price 13s. 6d. and 2s. 9d. each, with full directions. The large bottle contains the quantity of three small ones, or Pills equal to fourteen ounces of Camomile Flowers.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE Bombay journals brought by this mail are almost entirely occupied with reports of dinners, speeches, and other proceedings in relation to Sir Charles Napier, who has kept alive the interest of the Indian community in his behalf down to the very moment of his departure from their shores. As we have devoted a very large portion of our present impression to a record of these extraordinary proceedings, we shall make no further observations upon them in this place, than that the speeches of Sir Charles, presuming them to be accurately reported, exhibit more than his usual eccentricity.

The Governor-General was on his way towards Peshawur, which he expected to reach on the 20th January. The inclemency of the weather had materially retarded his progress. He was not able to move until the 6th, since which time he had crossed the Chenab, visiting Sealkote and Goojrat, having ridden one day 50 miles. On reaching the left bank of the Chenab, the party found the bridge quite isolated, with a quarter of a mile of water at either end: the passage was effected in a small boat. As there is no bridge at Jhelum, it is believed that the passage of the river cannot be completed under from three to five days. His Lord-was last heard of at Rawul Pindee.

The head-quarters camp of the Commander-in-Chief had reached Agra on the 23rd January. His Excellency was not expected until the 27th, and after a halt of a week or two, he would probably commence his march northwards.

Maharajah Golab Sing had returned to Jumoo.

That fine corps, the Scinde horse, has again distinguished itself against the marauders on the frontier of Upper Scinde. It appears that, about the 20th December, a large number of Murree Caterans assembled in the Murrow Valley, to make a raid on the Rozan Muzzarees, but finding that a strong detachment of the Scinde horse had been sent to Shawullee, they abandoned their design, and the greater part returned to their villages. Some of the most daring or needy, however, unwilling to return empty-handed, carried off some camels from Boordeka. The native officer in command at the station of Kundkote, Jemadar Doorga Sing, hearing of this, on the morning of the 24th, started with a small party of Jacob's horse, consisting of a duffedar, 15 troopers, and 4 Belooch guides, and overtook the robbers at a place called Sunree. The robbers abandoned their booty, and fled. The gallant jemadar, however, was not content with recovering the camels, without punishing the marauders. His party had covered 30 miles without halting, many of the horses had fallen dead from over exertion, and two had been ridden to death by the jemadar himself. He, however, mounted a third, and, with the few of his party who were still mounted, pursued the fugitives, and by the evening had got into the hills beyond Hyran, where he was encountered by a party of horse and a number of foot-men, his own party having by this time dwindled to two troopers and a Belooch guide, who earnestly advised the jemadar to return. He rejected this advice, and, with his two men, charged with the utmost fury. They were surrounded, dragged from their saddles, and speedily cut to pieces, having previously killed and wounded at least five times their number. The guide was also wounded, but managed to escape from the robbers. Other parties from the different posts around had been ordered out to join in the pursuit, but did not arrive in time to prevent the catastrophe. They, however, succoured the dismounted party, and brought them, as well as the wounded guide, back in safety. The unfortunate Jemadar Doorga Sing, who paid with his life the penalty of his rashness, was one of the most active and intelligent officers in the gallant corps to which he belonged. He had, before volunteering into Jacob's Horse, served nearly twenty years in the 2nd cavalry, and had always been distinguished for his gallant bearing as a soldier.

We mentioned in our last Summary that the Kookee chiefs, on the eastern frontier, had come in. It appears that they made their submission to Colonel Lester, and gave security for the peace of the southern frontier of Sylhet and Cachar.

It also appears that, since the Assam corps advanced into the Angami Nagas country, a party of those people made an incursion into northern Cachar, murdering three British subjects, and carrying away twenty-seven men, women, and children, as captives. It is supposed that a force will be sent against them under Colonel Lester. An order from Government had been received for the release of all the Munnipore Princes who were confined by order of the Superintendent of Cachar.

The intention heretofore entertained by General Whish, of visiting the eastern frontier, and ascertaining by personal inspection the state of the defences there, has been abandoned.

The affairs of the Nizam's state remain in the same unsatisfactory condition. Nothing had been done respecting the enforcement of the large claim of the Government on the Nizam's treasury; although there are rumours respecting a voluntary cession of his dominions for five or six years to a commission composed of Company's servants. The Englishman's correspondent at Hyderabad writes: "Though it is now nine days since the expiration of the time allowed to the Nizam to pay his debt, no money has been forthcoming; and the matter has not been agitated by the Resident further than by a note addressed to his Highness on the 5th, the substance of which was a suggestion that it was proper his Highness should pay the money." Meanwhile, there is no minister, and the Nizam secludes himself in his harem and indulges in strong drink. A body of 600 or 700 Rohillas, confined in the fort of Daroor, twenty-five miles from Mominabad, the headquarters of the cavalry division, had possessed themselves of it. The manner in which the seizure of this fort, one of the strongest in the Nizam's dominions, was effected, was as follows:—About noon, some sixty or seventy of the guards had gone outside the fort to cook their dinners. Some of the prisoners, who managed to escape, set fire to the sepoys' houses, and in the confusion the whole secured their freedom. Four of the prisoners and six of the sepoys were slain in the mélée. The commander of the garrison was tortured till he ordered the troops to evacuate, leaving their arms behind them. The country round was laid under contribution: the idle troops, roaming the country unemployed, flocking to the post. The 2nd cavalry from Mominabad, two squadrons of the 4th from Goolburgah, a troop of the 5th from Aurungabad, three companies of the 4th Nizam's infantry from Hingolee, with a wing of the 5th, two 18-pounder guns, two 9-inch mortars, and a light field-battery, proceeded without delay for the scene of action. The 6th infantry were ordered from Bolarum, and by the 25th January there were expected to be some 2,000 men, with eight pieces of ordnance, before the fort, the whole commanded by Brigadier Beatson, a distinguished officer.

The Calcutta Morning Chronicle states, that, in addition to the immense pecuniary claim of the British Government upon the Nizam, that potentate is indebted to two Parsee merchants thirty-five lacs of rupees, and that they have determined to lay their accounts before the Court of Directors, and subsequently before the House of Commons.

The weather in the Upper Provinces had been unusually rainy: there had been a very heavy fall of snow at Simla, Landour, and Mussoorie, which seems to have stopped all communication between these hills and the Dhoon: and as the residents had not laid in provisions of either food or fire, they were in a very unpleasant situation. In the Deyrah Dhoon the rain had been incessant day and night for some time, and the country was completely flooded.

A slight shock of an earthquake was experienced at Calcutta, and a more severe one at Burrisaul, on the 8th January; another was felt at Mooltan and Lahore, while the moon was under eclipse, on the 17th. On the 30th November an aerolite fell at Sulkea, near Bissunpore, about three o'clock in the afternoon. It was accompanied by an explosion like the discharge of ordnance, and buried itself four feet in the ground. On being extracted, it was found to measure three feet by one and a half in circumference. On the 8th January, a meteor of surpassing brilliancy was seen at Beerbhoom, about twenty minutes past nine in the morning, and full sunshine. It burst as it approached the earth, and a great block was seen to fall from its fragments towards the ground.

The trial of Jotee Persaud, the great contractor, was proceeding at Agra when the last advices left that city.

The affairs of the North-Western Bank remained in statu quo, but a statement of the leading facts has been sent to the Commander-in-Chief, who, it was expected, would take some decisive steps in the matter. Col. Ponsonby, chairman of the bank, had retired from the direction.

The preparatory work on the Bengal railway has been resumed, and no complaints are heard of opposition on one side, or of oppression on the other.

The line of electric telegraph betwixt Calcutta and the mouth of the river was still in progress. It has been completed more than half-way to Diamond Harbour, and some educated natives have been set to learn by practice the art of transmitting signals. The great difficulty will be in carrying the wire across the river at Diamond Harbour, so as to secure it against rupture by vessels dropping up or down with an anchor on the ground.

The trade report at Calcutta is not very cheering. The money market was almost without precedent "tight." The Bank of Bengal had raised its rates of discount so high that 11 per cent. is its figure for the best mercantile bills. Exchange is quoted at 2s. 2½d. to 2s. 2¾d. for first class credits at six months' sight.

No later intelligence has been received from China than was contained in our last issue.

The city of Rangoon, the maritime capital of the Burmese empire, has been entirely destroyed by fire, the losses being estimated at 300,000l.

The intelligence from the Cape of Good Hope, which is given under its appropriate head, inspires some fear of a frontier war.

THE TURTON SUFFERERS.

The Draft Act, "For Relief of certain Sufferers by the Insolvency of Sir Thomas Turton, Baronet," recites the Act of Parliament, 40 Geo. 3, under which Sir T. Turton, as registrar of the Ecclesiastical Court, was empowered to administer to the estates of all British subjects dying intestate within the presidency of Fort William, in default of any claim on behalf of any next of kin or creditor; that, on the 25th February, 1848, he resigned the office of registrar, then being insolvent, and unable to pay several large sums of money due to the owners of sundry estates, to which he had administered or had assumed to administer under the power vested in him by the said Act, and also other sums of money due to the owners of sundry estates of which he had taken charge as such registrar, although, on account of the small value thereof, or otherwise, no letters of administration of the last-mentioned estates were granted to him, and also other sums of money belonging either to suitors of the Supreme Court of Judicature, or other persons for whose benefit a trust was created in the said Sir Thomas, by reason of his holding the office of registrar of the said Court, on its ecclesiastical, equity, and admiralty sides, or as curator under Act XIX. 1841, or as official trustee under Act XVII. 1843; and whereas, in order to know the deficiency of the said Sir Thomas, in respect of the said several particulars of charge, certain commissioners were appointed on the 8th March, 1848, to inquire and report thereon to the Court; and whereas the said commissioners made their report to the Court the 25th January, 1849, and now filed of record in the said Court, whereby they reported fully on the several matters committed to them, setting forth the names and titles of the several estates, suitors, and other persons, to whom, upon the account taken by them, money or securities for money appeared to be due by the said Sir Thomas; and whereas it is deemed expedient that the said sufferers by the insolvency of the said Sir Thomas be reimbursed their several losses out of the accumulated produce of certain unclaimed estates, now in the custody and management of the administrator-general, due provision being made for securing the interests of the rightful claimants thereunto, if any shall hereafter appear: it is enacted as follows:—

I. The net proceeds of all estates to which the registrar of the said Ecclesiastical Court has administered, in right or under colour of his office, under the said Act of Parliament, and which were in the custody or control of the said registrar, ready to be distributed, at any time before the 1st of January, 1836, and have been since that time unclaimed and now continue unclaimed in the custody or control of the administrator-general in Bengal, in right of his office under Act VII. 1849, and also from time to time the net proceeds of all estates to which the said registrar or the said administrator-general, under the said Act VII. 1849, has administered, or to which the said administrator-general shall hereafter administer, and which shall have continued for fifteen years in his custody or control unclaimed by any person entitled thereunto, shall be transferred and paid, as the same respectively accrue, to the sub-treasurer of the East-India Company at Fort William, in Bengal, and be carried to the account and credit of the East-India Company, for the general purposes of government.

II. If any claim shall be hereafter made to any part of the net proceeds of any estate so transferred and paid to the account and credit of the East-India Company, and established to the satisfaction of the administrator-general and accountant to the Government of Bengal for the time being, the said accountant shall direct the sub-treasurer to repay, and the sub-treasurer shall thereupon repay, the principal sum so paid or represented by the securities so transferred, or so much thereof as shall appear to be due to the claimant, out of the moneys of the East-India Company in his custody.

III. The accountant to the Government of Bengal is authorized and required from time to time to direct the sub-treasurer to pay, and the sub-treasurer shall thereupon pay, out of the moneys of the East-India Company in his custody, such sums as will be sufficient to pay off and discharge to such persons as shall appear to be entitled thereunto, as the lawful representatives of the intestates named in the schedules (A), (B), (C), (D), annexed to the said report, and also to the suitors and other persons entitled to the equity deposits and trust moneys in the suits and under the trusts named in the schedules (E) and (F), annexed to the said report, and other deposits and trust moneys (if any) paid or entrusted to the said Sir Thomas by order of the said Court, and to the net proceeds of the estate of Ramnarain Coondoo, of which the said Sir Thomas was curator, under Act XIX. 1841, the several principal sums of money which, upon the final adjustment of the accounts of their several claims and estates, shall appear to have been due to them respectively from the said Sir Thomas on the 25th of February, 1818, and to be then still due and unsatisfied; and also the balance due by the said Sir Thomas to Government in respect of court fees received by him as registrar of the said Court, but not accounted for by him to Government.

REFINED SYSTEM OF FORGERY.

A case of much public interest is undergoing judicial investigation at Agra. For a long time past there have resided in Agra two of the most notorious forgers in Upper India, named Koondun Lall and Mootee Lall (brothers), inhabitants of Muttra. These men maintained a regular forging establishment, having numerous dependants, to act the witness, collect information, do the go between, &c. They were the terror of the country. They had been arrested six or seven times, tried, and one of them committed and sentenced to five years in the Muttra district, but released by the Sudder. The Punjab chieftain, Rajah Lall Singh, who resides now as a pensioner of the British Government, at Agra, under surveillance of the magistrate, when he first arrived, deposited Rs. 40,000 in cash with a young spendthrift banker, named Punna Lall. But afterwards, hearing a bad character of him, he withdrew the money, and executed a sealed acquittance. Punna Lall, some time after, employed these two forgers to forge a bond on the part of the rajah in favour of himself (Punna Lall) for Rs. 45,000; which was done, the stamp being bought in the name of a servant of the rajah. The bond was delivered to Punna Lall, and the forgers received their hire. But subsequently they thought they might get some money from the rajah by this means themselves. They, therefore, conveyed to him information that such a document had been executed, and confirmed the information by referring him to the collector's office, where sure enough he found that a 64-rupee stamp had been bought in his servant's name. Accordingly, he willingly listened to the offer to recover the forged deed by a heavy payment. After much negotiation, it was settled that a sum of money should be paid and the bond restored; but meanwhile the rajah had been in communication with the magistrate, and it was arranged in concert that a police officer should accompany the rajah's people to receive the deed. Accordingly, on the afternoon of the day, a clever policeman was sent to the rajah, who disguised him as a Sikh, and sent him with his people and two bags of money. The money was produced and the deeds, forged bond and receipt, delivered, and the forgers arrested in the act! On examination it appeared that the deed seized, which was also on a 64-rupee stamp, was not the real forgery for which Punna Lall paid, but a second forgery to the same effect, the endorsement of the sale of the stamp having been washed out and altered in name and date to agree with that of the first stamp purchased for Punna Lall. The case is one of great importance. These forgers have forged not only private documents, but, during our wars, have forged pretended communications (treasonable) from native chiefs, whom they desired to injure, and had them intercepted. The native community is looking for the result with no small interest. Punna Lall has also been committed; unfortunately, however, an interval was allowed to elapse between the arrest of Koondun and Mootee and the seizure of the papers of Punna Lall, during which it is supposed the first original forgery was with many like papers destroyed, the forgers having been arrested at 8 p.m., and Punna Lall's papers seized only at 10 a.m. next day. All his books, however, are shown to be fabricated, so that it is probable he will not escape wholly.—Delhi Gazette, Jan. 25.

REVENUES OF BENGAL.

The Comparative Register, which is published annually by order of the Deputy-Governor, gives us a very gratifying exhibition of financial prosperity. While the journals in London are proclaiming to the world that the finances of this empire are rapidly approaching the verge of bankruptcy, the plain and authentic statements drawn up from the public records by the accountant to the Government of Bengal, and on which the fullest reliance can be placed, at once allay all the apprehensions with which the editors of those papers have filled the public mind. They have dwelt with peculiar emphasis on the alarming diminution of the resources of the provinces of Bengal and Behar, which are the most productive portions of the British empire in India. It is precisely these representations which the present schedule most effectually refutes, as the following statement will demonstrate:—The gross revenues of these provinces were, in the year 1847-48, Rs. 9,43,36,992; in the year 1848-49, Rs. 9,81,78,370; in the year 1849-50, Rs. 10,72,65,478. In the past year the revenue exceeded that of the preceding year by Rs. 90,87,108; at the same time, the amount of charges was reduced to the extent of Rs. 13,95,629, and a comparison of the two years 1848-49 and 1849-50, therefore, exhibits an improvement of actual income in the past official year of Rs. 1,04,82,737—more than one million sterling. The gloomy vaticinations of the London press are thus at once disproved, when brought to the test of facts and figures. As yet our resources at this Presidency are unimpaired; and, what is more, they show a steady and progressive improvement. We confine ourselves to a brief notice of the most prominent items in which the difference between the two years is apparent. The Nizamut stipends exhibit a sudden diminution of nearly five lacs of rupees. The land revenue stands much the same as it did; there is a trifling increase both of income and of charges, but the difference between the two periods does not exceed a lac of rupees. The abkaree, or duty on spirituous liquors, exhibits an improvement of somewhat more than a lac of rupees in the year, the whole of which, however, will probably be lost by abolishing the commissionerships and placing the administration of this revenue under the collector, who, according to a late circular order of the Board, appears already to have no fewer than thirty-six different departments of duty under him. We shall then find the revenue decrease, in exact proportion as drunkenness increases. In the customs, we have precisely the same expenditure, but an increase of receipts of not less than 13 lacs of rupees. The revenue from the salt manufactured in the country has not recovered the shock it received between two and three years ago; the receipts are stationary, but the expenditure during the last year has been reduced to the extent of two lacs of rupees. The Marine receipts are a trifle less, but the expenditure has been diminished more than three lacs of rupees. The great difference of the year, however, is to be found in the article of opium. The net profit in 1848-49 was Rs. 1,95,69,000; in the past year, Rs. 2,79,29,000; the whole of which will vanish, if ever the cabinet of Peking should unfortunately take to the study of the political economists, and legalize the cultivation of the drug.—Friend of India, Jan. 16.

MISCELLANEOUS.

REGULATIONS FOR THE ARMY.—A committee has been appointed to sit at Simlah, to draw up a new code of regulations for the government of the Bengal army. The officers appointed are Lieut.-col. H. Lawrence, 44th N.I., Lieut. R. M. Paton, Adjutant of the 6th Battalion of Artillery, and Lieut. E. B. Johnson, Deputy Judge Advocate General of the Sirhind division. These officers are to assemble at the office of the Adjutant-General, who will grant the use of all the documents in his possession to the committee, and in communication with whom the work will be conducted.

EMPLOYEES IN THE PUNJAB.—We remarked the other day the growing disproportion between the number of civil and military officers employed in the Punjab. The annexed table will show the relative strength of the services, and also the total number of officers employed for the government of the country:—

Commissioned Officers.

	Civil.	Mily.	Total.
Board of Administration ...	3	2	5
Commissioners, &c. ...	7	1	8

—Lahore Chron. Jan. 8.

LIEUT. COL. DAVIDSON.—Most of our readers are acquainted with the circumstances that led to the removal, by order from the Court of Directors, of Lieut.-Col. Davidson, of the Bengal Engineers. Papers discovered amongst those of a deceased officer, also of the engineers, have induced a revision at home of the whole question, connected with the extreme measure resorted to; the result will be as public a justification, short of restoration to the service, as the conspiracy that ruined the gallant officer is said to have been foul.—Ibid. Jan. 15.

THE BANK OF BENGAL has felt the effect of the demand for money, which has been produced by the revival of trade, and the drains from the sister presidencies, and has raised its rates of discount 2 per cent. The last half-yearly dividend on the shares of the Bank has been declared at the rate of Rs. 10½ per cent. per annum, the highest dividend that has been given for some years.

THE CROPS.—Letters from all quarters in the Upper Provinces report very favourably of the state of the crops. The late rains have been so general and so copious that it is said the rubber crop will be enormous.—Delhi Gaz. Jan. 25.

LAHORE.—Sir Henry Lawrence was expected to arrive about the 23rd or 24th. Meean Bichutter Sing, the son of Meean Lall Sing, and Meean Pear Sing, the son of Meean Pirthee Sing, had arrived. It is said that these chiefs were under surveillance at Cashmere, having been suspected of some underhand work. They had been to the camp of the Governor-General for the purpose of having the matter investigated, but were ordered to Lahore, there to await the arrival of Sir Henry Lawrence. Nawab Sheik Emmaumooden Khan, having received information of a plot against his life, planned by a female he married when ruler of Cashmere, complained to Major Macgregor, who ordered the brothers of the woman to be disarmed, and the woman, after being deprived of her valuables, is to be divorced. Great preparations are said to be making the approaching marriage of Jemmadar Khoosheal Sing's son. Rajah Tej Sing has already commenced distributing the fruits and sweetmeats.—Delhi Gaz. Jan. 25.

MR. HUNTER, late of the 24th reg. N.I., died some days back at Benares. This unfortunate young man, who was dismissed by a court-martial, was, shortly after his dismissal, found weltering in his blood outside the fort at Chunar, a deep sword cut, inflicted by some unknown hand, having rendered him insensible, and ultimately caused his death. The skull was fractured, and an abscess had formed beneath the injury, which communicated with the brain. His funeral was attended by Mr. Reed, the Commissioner, who expresses himself determined to have the assassins found out and punished as they deserve. It is pretty well known at Chunar who were the instigators of the murder, and even the murderers themselves have been named, two scoundrels who are known to be ready to perpetrate any crime. Enormous bribes, it is said, have been lavished to conceal the evidence; one party alone being reported to have received Rs. 500. The nearest magistrate lives at Mirzapore. Had an intelligent officer been on the spot where the outrage was committed, there would have been little difficulty in discovering the perpetrators. It certainly appears desirable that an officer with the powers of a magistrate should be placed at Chunar. Government has sanctioned the offer of five hundred rupees reward for the apprehension of any of the parties concerned in the murder.—Ibid.

MR. A. BLANEY.—We regret to record the death, in the neighbourhood of Batala, under very painful circumstances, of Mr. A. Blaney, an assistant revenue surveyor, which occurred on the 15th January. It appears that about 10 p.m. on the night of the day before, Mr. Blaney ordered his servants to bring his hooka, let down the purdas, and leave his tent. About an hour after, the camp was aroused by cries proceeding from the tent of Mr. Blaney, who, on an entry being effected, was found enveloped in flames. The fire was extinguished with difficulty, and it was found, on examination, that a cotton ruzia and the clothes he had on him, had all been destroyed, and his back severely scorched from the hips upwards. After examination, the unfortunate man lay down again. Soon after the sub-assistant surgeon, named Purmesur Das, arrived, and finding that Mr. Blaney was asleep, left the tent without further examining the injuries which, he was told, had been caused by the accident. Mr. Blaney awoke in the course of the night, sensible, to judge from his then remarks, but was found dead in the morning. It was well known that he was in the habit of drinking to excess, and of procuring country spirits, when brandy was not to be had; it is believed that he was in a state of intoxication when he called for his hooka, a spark from which, no doubt falling accidentally on his ruzia, it smouldered until the flames burst out.—Lahore Chron., Jan. 22.

THE SIKH PRISONERS.—We have little local news. On the 17th, the three Sikh chief, Shere Sing, Outan Sing, and Chutter Sing arrived here under a strong guard, and were safely lodged in Fort William on the following day. It is said that they will be sent with their countryman, Dewan Moolraj, to Singapore. The Government has lately passed an Act of the legislature, authorizing itself to detain state prisoners. It would be well if some independent member of the House of Commons would move for a return of such persons, with the reasons for their detention.—Englishman, Jan. 23.

THE POST-OFFICE COMMISSIONERS are assembling here. Those of Madras and Bengal are already on the spot, and their colleague from Bombay is expected shortly. It is extensively believed, and very generally hoped, that they are prepared to recommend an universal half-anna postage for letters, and a one anna postage for newspapers.—Hurkaru, Jan. 23.

CAPT. JOHNSTON, controller of government steamers, is about to retire on account of ill health, after 25 years' service.

ASSAM TEAS.—At the general meeting of the Assam Company, on the 17th January, the report of the directors of the operations in Assam for the past year, stated the net produce of the season to be as follows:—

		lbs.
Southern division	...	2,25,000
Northern division	...	12,000
Total	...	2,37,000

Being again an advance on the previous season of 21,000 lbs. of tea. Besides this excess in the quantity manufactured and so promptly sorted and packed, 86 poorahs (upwards of 100 acres) of jungle lands were cleared, sown, and cultivated. All of which, with other extraordinary works, were accomplished also without any material increase to the expenditure.

THE SIKH PRISONERS.—The Hurkaru says that the Sikh prisoners now confined at Allahabad are to be immediately sent down to the presidency, and subsequently despatched to Singapore. That settlement is also the final destination of the ex-Dewan of Mooltan. The order is said to have emanated from the Court of Directors, and we are glad to find that Lord Dalhousie had no part in a measure which is so severe and unnecessary an aggravation of the punishment inflicted on the sirdars. The sentence, moreover, as regards Chutter and Shere Singh, is opposed to English views, both of justice and humanity. If the sirdars are to be punished as rebels, they ought to be tried, as Moolraj was; and if they are state-prisoners, the Court has no right to sentence them to transportation.—Friend of India.

SIRDAR HEERA SING.—Intelligence has been received by the Lahore authorities of the death, at Cawnpore (we have not heard the date), of Sirdar Heera Sing, the only surviving brother of the Maharanee Chund Kowur. Had his morals not been so low, and his talents at par, he might have attained distinction at the Lahore durbar during the troublous times of the Sikh state, considering the opportunities that were afforded him. As it was, he was looked upon, even by his sister, in the plenitude of her power, as a drunken sot, not to be intrusted with any affairs of importance. He was, we believe, in the receipt of Rs. 1,000 per mensem; a portion of which will be allowed to the widow, who was with him at the time of his decease. We do not believe he has left any children.—Lahore Chron., Dec. 28.

EDUCATION OF NATIVE FEMALES.—The Bhaskur informs his readers that, as many educated native females read his paper, it is advisable to provide them with literature of a more miscellaneous character than that which generally appears in his columns. He has, therefore, commenced the translation of the "Infant Readings" published by the Brothers Chambers.

[CAPT. SPENS, of the Engineers, was tried on January 16, for manslaughter, in the Supreme Court, and a verdict of acquittal returned. Immediately on becoming acquainted with the issue of the trial, Government ordered the military board to reinstate that officer in his appointment as executive officer in the Midnapore or Culmahole Division.

MILITARY ON DITS.—H.M. 14th Dragoons, en route to Meerut, were expected to arrive at Jullundur about the 23d January, Loodiana the 26th, Umballa the 4th of February, Saharunpore the 9th, and Meerut about the 14th. The 1st Punjab Cavalry march about the 21st January, from Peshawar for Kohat, which is to be their future station. A general move of the Irregular Force has, it is said, been sanctioned. There is likely to be some change shortly in the 7th Cavalry, consequent on the promotion of Major Philipps on the reported retirement of Lieut.-Col. Taylor. Capt. Colyear will, it is said, accept the bonus in February, and Lieut. Robinson will go early in the year. —There is every probability of Brigadier Tennant, commanding the station of Lahore, proceeding to Umballa to take the place of Brigadier Monteath, C.B., in lieu of Major-General Battine, about to enter on his tour of divisional command.—Brigadier Hewitt, recently appointed to the brigade staff, will succeed Brigadier Tennant at Lahore.—The 4th Light Cavalry (Lancers) and the 6th Irregular Cavalry (the head quarters) had returned to Sealkote.—It is understood the whole of the artillery now at Sealkote will remain there, as the one barrack, which is nearly finished, will be sufficient to hold all the men of Capt. Baldwin's troops, and of Capt. Dalmain's battery.—The 66th, or Goorka Regiment, under command of Major Browne, reached Wuzeraabad, on the 20th ult., en route to Peshawar.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

SIR C. NAPIER'S FAREWELL ORDER.

Camp Gorounda, Jan. 4, 1851.—The Commander-in-Chief feels that he cannot confer a more substantial benefit at this moment, upon the collective armies of India—especially upon that portion of them which must always comprise a most important and interesting branch of the United Service;—the body of its junior officers,—than by holding up to their enduring and perpetually respected remembrance, the valuable counsel tendered to the army at large in the parting General Order of his predecessor in the command, dated the 15th inst. The Commander-in-Chief is well aware that advice tendered so earnestly and so forcibly, and with such manifest solicitude for the welfare of all, especially of those to whom it is pointedly addressed, could not fail to command for itself a more than ordinary share of attention and subscription, independent of any effort of his own to enforce the efficacy of the appeal: but he is anxious not to leave unattempted any means that can by possibility avail for averting the mischief that may be impending in some quarters, or for timely arresting, even in one individual instance, the progress towards courses so distressing in their consequences, to those whose duty it is to adjudge the award, while calamitous in the extreme to those at whom the judgment of necessity strikes, all so vividly and instructively set forth in the general order now adverted to; demonstrative also of the only course open for those in authority, from the Commander-in-Chief down to officers in regimental and even in lower command, unflinchingly to hold by if they would support the fair fame of the army, in peace as well as in war, and of the general respectability of the military society in India.

(Signed) W. GOMM, General.

POSTS OF NOORPORE AND KANGRA.

Simla, Jan. 6.—With reference to General Orders of the 24th Dec., 1849, his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief, with the concurrence of the Governor General, is pleased to re-transfer the posts of Noorpore and Kangra from the Punjab division to the Jullunder field-force command.

MADRAS. MISCELLANEOUS.

THE FOLLOWING GEOLOGICAL DISCOVERY has been made by General Cullen at Cochlin. A question having been raised as to the relative positions of that most mysterious of rocks, laterite, and the shell limestone on which, in this quarter, it was said to rest, General Cullen caused a well to be dug from the top of the cliff, about forty feet above the level of the sea, downwards to this depth: it was about eighty feet inland. At the depth of 37½ feet he came to shell limestone: a well sunk near the sea, eighty-four miles to the S.W., gives precisely the same results. The limestone is one of the most modern of our formations; the shells contained in it seem all recent,—the lignite and fossil remains are close by. The supposition that laterite is nothing else than decomposed granite, or trap in situ, is thus completely and at once disposed of.

HINDOOSTANEE MAGAZINE.—The Madras U. S. Gazette mentions that a meeting had been called of the subscribers to the Mahomedan Public Library, to consult upon the propriety of establishing a Hindoostanee monthly magazine. Two Mahomedan gentlemen of high rank argued very strenuously in favour of the project, and exhibited the strongest desire to diffuse practical knowledge among their countrymen.

THE MADRAS BANK.—The U. S. Gazette mentions that the directors of the Madras Bank, foreseeing a pressure on the money market, have applied to the local Government for three lakhs of rupees, offering to pay the amount in Calcutta, through their agents. The Madras authorities have consented, on condition of being first certified that the Bengal Treasury has received the money.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

INDIAN ALLOWANCES.

Fort St. George, Jan. 17, 1851.—The Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to direct that in future, in assimilation with the rules and practices of the Bengal presidency, Indian allowances shall be paid to officers or troops from the date of landing, or that of the men being rationed by the commissariat department.

From the date inclusive of landing, or of the men being rationed by the commissariat department, which ever may first happen, both officers and men are to be brought upon the Indian scale of pay and allowances; for commissioned staff, head money, and subsistence to women and children will become payable.

On the departure of troops, the commissioned officers proceeding with them are entitled to Indian regimental allowances to the date inclusive of the dispatch or actual sailing of the vessel on which embarked, but established allowances for command, &c. inclusive of subsistence to women and children, are claimable only up to the date of embarkation inclusive; commissioned officers returning to Europe without any charge are entitled to Indian regimental allowances to the date inclusive of the actual sailing of the vessel on which they proceed, subject however to the restrictions contained in paragraphs 7 and 8, section 1, head "Absence," "Pay and Audit Regulations."

Commissioned officers of her Majesty's and the Hon. Company's service arriving at Madras without any charge are entitled to regimental Indian allowances from the date of reporting their arrival in person at the brigade major's and town major's offices respectively. In like manner the commencement of Indian regimental allowances to officers of the Madras establishment who arrive in, or return to their presidency via Bombay or any port other than Madras, under circumstances giving them claim according to regulation to Indian allowances from the date of reaching such port, will be regulated by the certified date of their reporting their arrival to the proper authority there.

PHYSICIAN GENERAL CURRIE.

Fort St. George, Jan. 24.—Physician General Claud Currie, having obtained permission to retire upon his pension on the completion of his tour of duty in the Medical Board, the Right Hon. the Governor in Council has much pleasure in thus publicly recording his approbation of that officer's long and meritorious services to the state, for a period of nearly forty-five years, during which he has evinced in every grade which he has successively filled in the Medical Department, the most unremitting energy, and untiring zeal for the public good.

BOMBAY.

SIR CHARLES NAPIER.

The ex-Commander-in-Chief arrived at Kurrachee on the 12th January. On the 14th he dined with the station staff, when he delivered a speech, of which the following is an extract:—

"As I cannot accept all the praise myself, neither can the brave army (of Scinde) share it all. There is another, under whose orders I and that army acted, and to whom honour is due, and that person is Lord Ellenborough. I was acting under his orders. As a thorough statesman, after once giving me command, he treated me as a general officer. I had his orders to do so and so, and I did so and so, which resulted in the conquest of Scinde. I was vilified for this, abused and scorned; but Lord Ellenborough was a wise politician, and I am not a man to shrink from my duty when honourably treated and trusted as a general officer in the British army. If it was not for the conquest of Scinde, I ask you, gentlemen, where would General Whish and Lord Gough and Lord Dalhousie have been by this? Mind, I do not mean to cast the slightest slur on any of these parties. Lord Gough is a noble old soldier; but I maintain that, if it had not been for the conquest of Scinde, which enabled a gallant Bombay army to appear at Mooltan and Goojerat—I maintain that, if Scinde had not been ours at the time, General Whish and Lord Gough would not have gained what they have so gloriously gained, and the Meers would have marched to the aid of Moolraj with 100,000 hardy Beloochees, to drive us from the country. Ask my friend Scott [tapping Colonel Scott on the shoulder] where General Whish would have been if Scinde had not been ours, and a Bombay army not able to march on Mooltan, and he will tell you where. You are all Bombay officers now assembled here, and I feel happy in the society of Bombay officers. It is to them I owe a great deal. I entered on command with them nine years ago. I have commanded an independent army, with full and unrestricted powers, and I have fought and gained victory at the head of the gallant Bombay army. There are a few here now who have shared with me in battle. There is Hill, and Green, and Marston, but for whose swords I should not have been here to-night. There is, therefore, much that attaches me to the brave Bombay army, and I never can forget that army. I served as a general officer with that army for nine years, and I am now an old man, about seventy years of age. I was about sixty-three or sixty-four when I fought at their head and gained victory, and how can I forget that army? Lord Ellenborough trusted me as a general officer, and the brave Bombay army seconded me nobly. Not as it is the custom now-a-days, for a general officer entrusted with command to be told by a colonel or a captain that this thing is right and that thing is wrong! (Much cheering.) If general officers are unfit for command, in God's name do not appoint them to command; and I must say there are nine out of ten who ought not to be appointed: but I hold, that when once a general officer is appointed to command, he ought to be treated as such; he ought to know what is best for the army under his command, and should not be dictated to by boy politicians, who do not belong to the army, and who know nothing whatever of military science. It is this, gentlemen,—this,—that has caused me to resign my command. I have been thus explicit with you, because I am among my own Bombay officers once more."

At the mess of the 83d regiment, on the 15th, Sir Charles is reported to have said:—"When Lord Clive came to India, it could only be compared to a calf—when Lord Wellesley governed, India was like a heifer—but when Lord Ellenborough arrived as Governor-General, India had become a full-grown bull—therefore Lord Clive had to carry a calf, Lord Wellesley a heifer, but Lord Ellenborough a full-grown bull." He continued by remarking that Lord Dalhousie was deserving of no credit for the annexation of the Punjab; it was an act that was forced upon him; while Lord Ellenborough, a calm and profound statesman, had to act for himself, which was quite a different thing.

On the 17th he dined at the 64th mess, when he made a speech, like the preceding, in return to his toast, wherein he is said to have observed:—"Colonel Stopford has also adverted to the conquest of Scinde, but, as I have often said before, the honour of that conquest is not due to me; it is due to Lord Ellenborough, under whose orders I, and the army that I commanded, acted. Lord Ellenborough is a noble, honourable, far-sighted politician. He knew very well, and anybody with three ideas must have known the same (cheering), that the Punjab must one day be ours, and, with that foresight which distinguished him, he ordered me, when the Meers showed treachery and a disinclination to do what they ought to have done,—he ordered me, I say, to come to blows with them; and by the bye it was pretty hard blows when we were at it (cheering.) And now, gentlemen, I will give you an instance of Lord Ellenborough's eminent statesmanship, and his forethought as a thorough politician. As I said before, everybody with an idea must have known that the Punjab would one day be ours, and Lord Ellenborough, therefore, ordered me to build a large serai or depot for merchandise at Sukkur. It was Lord Ellenborough's intention to draw all the trade, whether from Russia or Persia, or Cabool, to Sukkur, and from there it would either go down or up the river in boats. It was also Lord Ellenborough's wish to build a dockyard at Sukkur, and to make every arrangement for building small boats and steamers there. Now I suppose you all know, that the Indus above Sukkur or Mithenkote branches out into five streams, like a lady's fan. Well, to navigate these branches, smaller boats are required than those used on the Indus, below Sukkur, which is sometimes like a little sea. Well, it was Lord Ellenborough's wish to build small boats and steamers to carry merchandise from the depot at Sukkur upwards—and that intended for Bombay could be shipped on large boats, and thence sent down the river to be embarked on large ships. This will show you what a noble and honourable, and far-seeing politician, and real statesman, Lord Ellenborough was—there was no chicanery or humbugging in any of his designs. However, as I was saying before, Lord Ellenborough ordered me to build the depot, and of course I was very willing to do it. I selected and marked out a spot for this purpose in Sukkur, and I believe it is there to this day. (Cheering.) Well, selecting a spot of ground and building a depot were different things: when it came to building I found I had to refer to the Military Board, to the Governor-General, the Supreme Council. God be praised I have got rid of that Council; and so the work has never been done. But I mention all these facts as a proof of the foresight of Lord Ellenborough."

On the 28th Jan. the steamer Dwarka, brought Sir Charles from Kurrachee to Bombay, where he landed at the Apollo pier, a guard of honour, consisting of a company of the 78th Highlanders, awaiting his arrival. "As soon as he discovered the number of the regiment," says the Bombay Telegraph, "Sir Charles could not restrain his impetuosity, and, calling Major Macintyre (the officer in command of the right wing stationed at Colaba) to his side, he addressed a speech to the men," which is said to be "correctly reported" as follows:—

"Men of the 78th! It is a great pleasure to me that you, her Majesty's Highland Regiment, should have been selected to receive me here on this quay. Men! I have not had the pleasure of seeing you since you suffered so fearfully at Sukkur; and, consequently, I have never had an opportunity of telling you publicly, and to your faces, that an infamous falsehood was propagated respecting your march to Sukkur by the lying papers of India. The papers of India stated that I ordered you to march to Sukkur at the most unhealthy season of the year. That was an infamous lie, men of the 78th!" (The observations of the gallant veteran had by this time excited the deepest interest and attention on the part of all the officers who were present, and they crowded thickly around Sir Charles. Observing this, he said,) "Stand back, gentlemen; stand back, and let the Band hear what I have got to say." (Then continuing, he said:—) "I marched you at a healthy season of the year, and when the fever attacked you, you were in barracks; and the proof of it is, that the European artillery who did not quit their barracks—who had never marched at all, and who had been two years stationed at Bombay—the European artillery, I say, were more unhealthy than you were, men of the 78th Highlanders! I tell you, men,—I tell you on your parade (and here the General threw his hands together with a most expressive gesture) that this is an infamous—a damnable—a worse than damnable lie! And I wish and request you all to tell your comrades what I say. I saw you embark at Sukkur, and the state you were then in was enough to break any soldier's heart; but the low, lying papers of India never broke my heart; and they never will; and they may all go to * * *!" (Saying which, Sir Charles gave a significant shake of his head, indicative of the word which he would not utter.)

"More than once," says the same journal, "the general reiterated his request that his words, his very words, might be repeated to all the Highlanders, each man to his comrade."

Sir Charles proceeded on foot from the landing-place to the house of Major Swanson, stipendiary member of the military board, with whom he proposed residing, declining to accept of a conveyance. He had been invited by Lord Falkland to remain during his stay at Government House, but seems to have preferred the privacy of a less distinguished place of abode.

On the 31st he dined with a party of 107 gentlemen, at the Byculla Club, who had invited him to an entertainment. Amongst the entertainers were both the Judges of the Supreme Court, Mr. Warden, judge sudder adawlut, the Commander-in-Chief of the Indian Navy, Mr. Goldsmid, secretary to government, Mr. Young, collector of customs, the Commandant of the Garrison, the Town Major, the Fort Adjutant, and about half of the Presidency Staff.

A guard of honour furnished by the 8th regt. of Bombay N.I., which served in Scinde under Sir Charles, formed en haie, on each side of the avenue leading to the portico, commanded by Capt. G. E. Ashburner.

Sir Charles, on his arrival, scanned the men of the guard of honour for a moment, and, signing for the music to stop, called Capt. Ashburner, and asked if his men were not the 8th Bombay N.I., and whether they had medals, to which the gallant officer replied in the affirmative. "Then, Ashburner," said he, "tell them all that I well remember their bravery in the field; that I am glad to meet them once more, and that they have well deserved the medals they were on their breasts. Interpret all this to them now." Capt. Ashburner complied with the request, and the men having again presented arms, the general entered the Club House, being received at the entrance by Sir W. Yardley, Major French, Brigadier Wyllie, and many others of his old distinguished comrades.

After the usual preliminary toasts,

Sir W. Yardley, calling for a full bumper, proposed the "toast of the evening," in a speech highly eulogistic of the military renown of the Conqueror of Scinde; the illustrious, hardy, and gallant veteran, who led a small body of men, which could scarcely be called an army, to some of the most astounding and marvellous victories which history has recorded; victories more stupendous, when compared with the handfuls of men by whom those victories were achieved, than perhaps any which are emblazoned upon the pages of our country's history. He had scarcely arrived in his native country," continued the speaker, "where he was received with acclamations by every man who had a just appreciation of his exalted merit, than a danger appeared suddenly, seriously impending over our empire in the East; and at that time the eyes of the whole nation were turned upon one individual, as the only man suited to take charge of the conduct of affairs at that critical juncture; and if ever there was an instance of a man's being placed at the head of an army by public acclamation, it was when our noble guest, Sir Charles Napier, took the head of the armies of India. At the command of his country, and at the call of his nation, he came out to India to retrieve any losses which the British armies might have sustained; and if the crisis had passed over before he arrived, is that any reason why his country should neglect, or why we should neglect any opportunity of doing homage to his devoted nature? (very loud cheers and cries of "that's true.") Gentlemen, it is matter of course that such a man should have occasionally found it necessary to disturb the quiet repose of some good easy men, who think full sure their 'greatness is a ripening,' so long as they can quietly enjoy their lives and the emoluments of their appointments; and of course it has happened to Sir C. Napier, as to many other good men, that he has been assailed by obloquy and vituperation; yet, whenever he has condescended to meet such enemies upon their own ground, they have had very little more reason to congratulate themselves upon the issue of the contest, than have those who have encountered him on the field of battle." (Cheers.)

Sir C. Napier, in returning thanks, said, "You must allow me great latitude, for when I rose up at this table, so help me God, I had not the least idea of what I should say to you; but I trusted to the feelings of a soldier's heart to answer whatever might be said about me at this table. Sir William Yardley has gone too far—far beyond any merits I can claim, and I do not altogether admit his praise. His kindness made him exaggerate me far and near; but there is one part of his speech where he did not, I mean when he said that I would be the first to feel hurt by any praise to me in deterioration, or at the expense, of Lord Gough's fame,—whom I love and venerate as a brother soldier of many years' service, and who is a man of as noble heart as ever entered the House of Lords. I have to say to Sir William Yardley that all the praise he has given me I must share with the armies of India. If I have the merit of arrangement, the soldiers conquered; and those men, such as I see here now, Whitley, Leeson, Wyllie, and lots of others, whom I could point out, gave effect to those arrangements, and without their courage those arrangements would have been null and void, I must not, however, forget the Bengal 9th regiment, whose courage was equal to that of its neighbours,—nor, because they were few and small, the courage of the little hardy band of Madras sappers, who behaved, as far as their numbers went, equal to any others, in the field. I can never pass over any man of the armies of the three presidencies; I know their valour; I have seen it in action, in the field of battle; I honour and respect and love all three armies; but I must confess to a prejudice which I have for the Bombay army—I will say nothing that would hurt the feelings of any Bengal officer; I have met soldiers from that army, great and noble men, from the top to the bottom of 'em, as ever I met from the Bombay army;—but I began my Indian career among Bombay soldiers, and whether that gave me the prejudice, I cannot tell, but at all events I have a prejudice for the Bombay army, and I can't get rid of it. But I have fought with the Bengal army too; and I commanded them for two years, and can say a good deal in their favour; but at the same time I must confess, as I have always done, a prejudice for the Bombay army, and it will always hold fast. I am seventy years of age, and I am perhaps growing a little prosy; but I must say, in this Bombay Presidency, that you are a little too much inclined to high birth and such things. There is among you now a brave man, a glorious soldier (I am among the breakers, but I am a pilot and will steer clear out again)—there is a brave and glorious soldier at this table, who rose from the ranks by his own good merits; and I love that man, yes, I do love him, because he was the man who first planted the colours of his nation on the breach at Moultan! But Regulation—that curse of honourable and honest feeling—which should be broken when found inconsistent—prohibits that glorious soldier from partaking with his brother officers of the benefits of that fund which, if he were to die, would give his widow and children the support due to the husband's and father's rank and standing. If he die to-morrow, his widow and children would lose everything due to the rank and station to which his valour and bravery raised him. I know I am speaking to your feelings, and I know that your feelings respond too. This regulation should be broken in Bombay." (After passing encomiums upon Captain Brown of the Bengal Engineers, Major M'Murdo, Major Jodden, Captain Rathbone, and Ali Mirza Akbar, Sir Charles's moonshce, whose disgraced position, he said, was a disgrace to those that placed him in it, he continued,)—"I may lay claim to one thing, for which Sir William Yardley gave me credit, a complete feeling of devotion to the honour of England and the interests of the East India Company. I have been counted an enemy of the Court of Directors. I am not their enemy—God forbid that I should be the enemy of any man but those who attack me, and to those I will not submit. I will never submit to be treated with injustice, and when I am ill-treated I will resist it. I have been held, too, to be inimical to the Press generally; and as regards this I will only say, for I do not like them all, and can boast no affection for the whole of them, that I am no man's enemy except those who attack me. This has been held to be enmity, but it is not, gentlemen; however, that independence of spirit, old as I am, with God's blessing, I will carry to the grave. Gentlemen, this very day fifty-seven years ago I received my commission as an ensign in the army; and on that day I girded on this sword, which for fifty-seven years has hung at my side! I received that commission rejoicing as a boy—your kindness has made me finish my career rejoicing as a man. I never felt anger or enmity towards any body of men, or any man. I have often been angry at individuals for the moment—at those who have unjustly attacked me—and I have wished for a broomstick and to be within three or four yards of them, I am not going to hide these little peculiarities—we all have them. And now, gentlemen, I will pass from this topic to others more interesting to you all. This Punjab which has been conquered—no matter by whom, or whether, bunglingly or well done or not—the Punjab is conquered. I rode through all of it to-day, and I saw immense oceans of grain—I never saw such a rich country. On my staff were one or two gentlemen who were farmers, and understood the thing; I did not, but, ignorant as I am, I understood riding through corn that high (pointing to his waist) for miles. These beautiful places are all watered by placid rivers, where there are coals obtainable for steamers, and timber, and sulphur (shall I say for Scotchmen), and minerals of all kinds—and all other sorts of produce—there is navigation for steamers, too, up to Jelum, to Nusseerabad, to Lahore—everywhere up rivers steamers can go and bring the produce down. Now, gentlemen, I met there a little man named Arratoon, a little man, like an English tug-steamer of immense power; and this Arratoon was a wealthy man, and he told me that he had felled enormous quantities of timber up country, at the source of the Chenab,—timber of immense size and good quality,—but he could not bring it down to your dockyards here, because Lord Dalhousie (we must take care, gentlemen, how we speak of him, for I am not one of his favourites, nor yet of his worshippers)—he applied to Lord Dalhousie from time to time for protection to bring it down; and he was refused that protection on the excuse that he had not proved that he had means to bring it down. Now, gentlemen, I do not know much about merchandise; some of you know much more about it than I do; but I never heard that the government had anything to do with the means of transmission of merchandise; they have to protect it—for commerce, like a child, must be nursed; but Lord Dalhousie refused to do even this. I had this account from Arratoon himself, who was an interested man. Well, this is nothing to the purpose you will say, so far as whether Lord Dalhousie is right or wrong; but it is to the purpose as regards a man like Arratoon, who supplied our armies from first to last—a man of great interest and of great mercantile knowledge; ready to bring produce to this place. It shows, first, that there is the produce ready to be brought down; and, secondly, that there are men ready to bring it down; and, thirdly, it shows the immense advantages which would result from its being brought here; for this place, with all its riches, is nothing to the riches of the North-West Provinces." (After some further remarks upon the same topic, he said:—"Nestor has done enough;" and, thanking the company, sat down amidst the most vociferous applause.)

Sir Charles rose again, and proposed "The Armies of India," observing in the course of his speech: "when I first was made Commander-in-Chief, I, like a poor baby as I was, thought I was to be Commander-in-Chief in truth; but I soon found that I was not Commander-in-Chief at all, but a sort of monster adjutant. I found my position incomplete, like a half-caste bull. I asked my adjutant-general what was the army I had to command,—and he could not tell me,—he could not tell me, and for a good reason, it had never entered into the heads of my predecessors to inquire what they commanded, and I do not believe they ever knew; and I'll tell you more; I don't know myself, I could never arrive at any exact calculation; I went up as far as 400,000 men scattered over this territory, sappers, miners, regular corps, irregular corps, cavalry, artillery, local—I don't know what the devil you call them—local corps; civil corps; all under the command of myself; all sorts of names they had. I can't remember half of 'em; but take them all together, I think they amounted to 400,000 men, well armed, well equipped, well disciplined, and, I will also say, well officered, for they were officered by British officers, they were, as I said, well equipped (for the Company is most generous in its equipment of its military men), and led by officers—English officers—and I know that wherever a British officer leads, you will not find the black Sepoy in the rear. I have seen this, and when their officers have fallen wounded, the Sepoys' bayonets were crossed over them to protect them. I have seen this, and speak what I know. The other day, at Kohat, where not a shot should have been fired, in that pass I saw the Sepoys stand by their European officers, and bravely carry them off when wounded, and die by their side when they expired. I shall never think of the Sepoys of India without respect and admiration; when I think of the 25th reg. Bombay army, and of the 12th, I cannot speak without affection and love. The Europeans belonging to the Indian armies are magnificent. I have seen them in action—the 1st and 2nd of the Bombay army, and the 1st and 2nd of the Bengal army—I have served with them, too, and was never able to see the slightest difference between them and our own European troops, except that they have not officers enough. European regiments are officered—the Company's are not, because they have not a sufficient number of officers—at least, in my opinion."

Brigadier Wyllie returned thanks.

Sir E. Perry proposed the health of Lady Napier, "who had sent her hero amongst them."

Sir Charles, in returning thanks, said Lady Napier "would have been here if she had had her own way, but I would not let her. I thought I was coming out for war,—if I had known that I was coming out for peace, I would have brought her with me; but I thought I was coming out for war, and so I did not."

After a few other toasts, the party separated.

Sir Charles (who took his departure from Bombay by the steamer that brought the mail) is described by the Bombay Telegraph as having "a lively and not altogether uninteresting or unbecoming aspect, wearing his beard flowing down to where as an ensign he once wore a gorget." The Bombay Times, which publishes a series of notes upon the general's speeches, accuses him of misstatements, and observes:—"He appears to have resigned because Government restricted his authority to that conferred by Act of Parliament on the Commander-in-Chief, and he stands confessed guilty of insubordination. He is understood to refuse refundment of the excess of prize-money issued by mistake, and to which he has the same sort of right as is possessed by a man who by accident receives 21s. in change for a sovereign, and declines returning the balance."

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL of Dec. 24th, 1850, arrived at Bombay Jan. 27th, per Sesostris.

ANXIETY TO BE TAXED.—The Mahomedans and Parsees resident in Surat have been striving for two years to induce Government to allow them to levy a tax on the provisions brought into the city, and apply the proceeds to municipal purposes. The promulgation of Act XXVI. of 1850, has been the signal for another effort, and an "overwhelming majority" of the most influential inhabitants of Surat have signed a requisition to Government to put the provisions of that Act in force!

A MODEL ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH, with 300 yards of wire, isolated by a gutta percha covering, has arrived at Indore, and will speedily be laid down, with the view in the first place, of testing the capabilities of the gutta percha to resist the white ants. A model railway, with train and carriage, had also arrived, and would shortly be set at work.

COTTON.—The Bombay Telegraph reports that the cotton crop of the present season, from the cotton lands of Guzerat, is expected to produce 300,000 bales, being 100,000 bales more than was obtained last year. The quality also promises to be good.

ANTIQUITIES.—The Bombay government have engaged the services of Mr. Fallon for a twelvemonth, at 40*l.* a month, for the purpose of obtaining drawings of the Cave Temples of Western India, in compliance with the wishes of the court of directors. They have allowed 840*l.* for drawings of the ruined city of Bejapore, but have not, so far as we know, as yet found an artist.—Bombay Times, Feb. 3.

MORTALITY.—About 2500 persons have of late died of cholera amongst us—the mortality of the month for the Island of Bombay is close on 3000.—Ibid.

COAL FOR THE STEAMERS.—An extraordinary exhibition of improvidence has been made on the two last occasions of the Indian Navy steamboats bringing the mails down from Aden. The supply of coal on board the Queen and the Sesostris (the boats in question) was so short, that to keep the fires up and the engines going, the commanders were in both instances compelled to cut away the orlop decks, to burn the long-boat, to burn valuable hawsers, spars, timber of every kind not requisite to keep the ship together, and it is even supposed that some of the parcels of books consigned to Bombay may by accident and in the confusion have been consigned to the flames. Yet, notwithstanding this, the Sesostris was no less than thirteen days in coming from Aden, a trip usually performed in six or seven days. We recollect formerly when one of the P. and O. boats, running between Gibraltar and Southampton, fell short of coal, and was compelled to burn her cargo of chestnuts in order to keep up the steam, but the facts we have above narrated exceed all the instances of improvidence we have as yet come to the knowledge of.—Bombay Telegraph, Feb. 3.

INFANT MARRIAGES.—Amongst the social reforms at present being urged by the more intelligent and liberal-minded portion of the Hindu community, there is a movement which will, we trust, prove successful against the practice of infant marriages, so to speak, productive of so much mischief to society, by obstructing the course of female education, and putting it out of the power of either party to select a mate according to their inclinations, partners being selected for them at a period of life when they neither know their own minds, nor are capable of judging of the dispositions and qualities of others. Marriages made under circumstances such as these, can result in nothing but indifference, neglect, and degradation. Infant marriage is one of the thousand and one abominations due to the Brahmins, and introduced, apparently, with the view of increasing their own influence. Not only do they receive no countenance from the sacred books, but girls are forbidden in the Shasters to wed earlier than sixteen,—a period in female life in India corresponding to one of twenty in Europe.—Bom. Times.

NUNS FROM AGRA.—It is with the highest gratification that we announce to our readers the arrival of the four religious ladies from Agra. They are, Mesdames St. Leo, formerly Miss Maissat, from Ennonay (France); St. Thaddeus, formerly Mrs. Brissaud, from Grenoble (France); St. Francis, formerly Miss Fyre (England); St. Peter of Alcanatara, a novice, formerly Miss Dalton (Ireland). The lady superioress, Mme. St. Leo, though a foreigner, speaks English very fluently and correctly, and is gifted with very high qualities. They belong to the institute called "Jesus and Mary," lately established at Lyons, under the patronage of the archbishop, Cardinal de Bonald. Its branches have spread throughout France, and have been introduced in other countries by their respective bishops. It was lately approved of by the present Pontiff, by a decree issued at Rome, under date the 21st December, 1847. The nuns of "Jesus and Mary" live in congregations, under the rules laid down by St. Augustine, to which they have added others, common and particular. It is the aim of this institute to impart education to children according to their social position; for that purpose, they have what are called pensionnats, wherein they bring up young pensionnaires, to whom they impart a religious and literary, social and domestic, instruction. They have a separate house, called Providence, wherein children of poor parents are received and instructed in a manner becoming the sphere in which they were born. This congregation is not limited to France; it propagates the knowledge and love of Jesus and Mary, and, with the permission of the Sovereign Pontiff, extends its labours to infidel countries. At Agra they are engaged in very extensive pursuits, and are ready to render their services wherever they may be required, conformably to the original object of the institute.—Catholic Examiner, Dec. 15.

COURT MARTIAL.

CAPTAIN HENRY RICHARD CONNELL MOYLE, 2ND GREN. N.I.
Head-Quarters, Bombay, Jan. 21, 1851.—At an European General Court Martial, assembled at Kurrachee, Jan. 2, 1851, and of which Lieut.-Colonel B. Trydell, H.M.'s 83rd regt. is president, Capt. H. R. C. Moyle, 2nd Gren. regt. N.I., was tried on the following charges, viz. :—

Capt. H. R. C. Moyle, 2nd Gren. regt. N.I., placed in arrest by order of the late Lieut.-Colonel R. Bulkley, commanding the same, and brought to trial by order of His Exc. the Commander-in-Chief, on the following charge, viz. :—

For highly disgraceful conduct, unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in the following instances, viz. :—

1st.—In having in cantonment near Bhoj, on or about Sept. 4, 1850, written or caused to be written, and been cognizant of the writing of, an anonymous paper, containing grossly scandalous insinuations against the character of the wife of an officer of the same regiment, and having sent the same paper through the post-office at Bhoj, under an envelope, to her husband.

2nd.—In having, at a meeting of the officers of the 2nd Gren. Reg., N.I., held in cantonment near Bhoj, on or about Sept. 24, 1850, when asked by the late Lieut.-Col. R. Bulkley, commanding the said reg., to declare on his word of honour whether he (Capt. Moyle) knew anything relating to the writing of the aforesaid envelope and anonymous paper, knowingly falsely denied that he did know anything of the same.

3rd.—In having subscribed fifty rupees towards discovering by whom the envelope and anonymous paper referred to in the preceding instances were written and sent, by inserting that sum opposite his name in a subscription list, circulated for the above purpose, about September 25 or 26, among the officers, and to blind them to the fact that he, Capt. Moyle, was fully cognizant of the same, and had falsely denied all knowledge of the authorship, at the meeting of the officers on the 24th.

Finding.—Guilty.

Sentence.—To be cashiered.

Approved—but the sentence remitted.

(Signed) J. GRAY, Lieut.-Genl., C.-in-C.

Recommendation of the Court.—The court having performed the painful duty of awarding a penalty of extreme severity, in accordance with the terms of an enactment which deprives them of all discretionary power, beg respectfully to recommend the case of Capt. H. R. C. Moyle to the merciful consideration of his Ex. the Commander-in-Chief.

To reconcile in some degree the apparent anomaly of convicting a party of "disgraceful conduct," and yet displaying an interest on his behalf, the court, while admitting that the facts charged have been established by evidence, beg most respectfully to submit the following as the grounds on which their present recommendation is based.

With regard to the anonymous letter referred to in the first instance of the charge, the court, from the great intimacy which has been proved to have existed between the party addressed and the prisoner, are disposed to attribute the conduct of the latter rather to a lamentable defect of judgment than to any feeling of malice or resentment. In respect to the denial of the authorship of the anonymous letter at the meeting of the officers held on September 24, the court are induced to attach much weight to the extenuating circumstances adduced by the prisoner in his defence—viz., the fact of the feeble state of his health at the time the sudden and unexpected call made upon him to answer a question which was calculated to throw him off his guard, the confession made by him almost immediately afterwards to a brother officer, and the testimony borne to his character for veracity previous to the occurrence of the affair which has placed him in his present humiliating position.

Remarks by the Commander-in-Chief.—In yielding to the urgent recommendation of the Court in the present case, by remitting the just sentence passed on Capt. Moyle, I have given full weight to his previous good character, and have further taken into consideration that this is the first trial of an officer which has come under my disposal since I assumed the command of the Bombay army, the correct tone and feeling of which cannot, I rejoice to think, be injured by this act of leniency. In addition, also, to these inducements to mercy, I am led to concur in the opinion of the Court, so far as regards the act set forth in the first instance of the charge, that it is to be "attributed rather to a lamentable defect of judgment than to any feeling of malice or resentment."

But in thus exercising the power of remission vested in me, I feel it to be my imperative duty to pass the most severe censure on Capt. Moyle for the culpable acts of which he has been found guilty; and to express my earnest hope that the position in which he now stands will prove a lasting warning to him through life; and that he will justify this act of clemency on my part by a strictly honourable course of conduct, and thereby fully recover the respect of his brother officers.

J. GRAY, Lieut.-Gen. C.-in-C.

Capt. H. R. C. Moyle is to be released from arrest, and directed to return to his duty.

* Thus marked are entitled to an additional half-share from the public treasury.

CEYLON.

The Governor dissolved the Legislative Council, on the 23rd December, with the following address:—

"Gentlemen,—I thank you, in the name of her Majesty, for the supplies you have granted for the public service for the ensuing year. It will be my object to use and apply those supplies with every regard to economy.

"It has been highly satisfactory to me, on my first arrival amongst you, to find prevailing throughout the colony every indication of internal tranquillity, and that it is considered we are returning to a state of fair financial prosperity. My endeavours shall always be anxiously directed towards the furtherance of every object that can tend to the permanent benefit of the colony, especially towards the opening up the country by roads and other channels of communication, by which the produce of the interior can be brought to the ports of export. The successful working of the road ordinance will greatly facilitate this, and will, I trust, with the assistance of Government, ultimately perfectly accomplish what, to the interests of all, is of such vast importance.

"The ordinances which you have passed during the present session will, I am satisfied, be found conducive to the general welfare of the people; and especially that the crime of cattle-stealing, which in some districts is so prevalent, and which has been so much complained of by the people, will at last be checked, if not altogether suppressed.

"I have to thank you, gentlemen, for the time and attention you have given to the discharge of your duties, and I doubt not that when next session we meet again, we shall be able to co-operate with that harmony which I have already so gladly observed, and which I am satisfied will always mark our deliberations, in the enactment of measures having for their end and object the public good."

CHINA.

THE LATE COMMISSIONER LIN, or Lin-tsi-hseu, was born in 1785, in the department of Fu-chan-fu. In 1804 he took his master's, and in 1811 his doctor's, degree; was advanced higher after his examination, and commanded to study the Manchu language. After various employment, as a literary officer, he was appointed in 1816, assistant moderator at the triennial examination for degrees in the province of Kiang-si. In 1820, he became one of the two censors representing Kiang-nan, and, in the same year, intendant of one of the four circuits of Cheh-kiang. In 1822, his health compelled him to resign, but he was, after a short interval, re-appointed to one of the five circuits of Kiang-su, and in a few months was made acting commissioner of finance for that province. In 1826, he rose to the chief superintendency of the rivers of Cheh-kiang and Kiang-su,—a most important trust,—when his mother's death obliged him to return home, to mourn the three years prescribed by law. Before this time had expired, he was directed by an imperial order to assume the supervision of certain earth-works on the southern river, and presently moved to Shanghai, to consult with other officers upon the expediency of allowing grain to be transported by sea, instead of by the grand canal. His health again failing, he was permitted to return to his native province until it should be restored, and his mourning ended; and, whilst living in retirement on this account, was allowed to decline an acting salt-inspectorship. In 1827, he repaired to Peking, and was sent to Shen-si, as judge and acting treasurer. The death of his father now put him in mourning till 1830, when, on being presented, he was made treasurer of Hu-pih, but soon transferred to Ho-nan, in the same capacity; thence to Nanking in 1831, and thence, again, to the superintendence of the Yellow River. In 1832, during a period of great distress, he was governor of Kiang-si; in 1835-36, governor-general of Hu-Kwang, or of Hu-pih and Hu-nan; in 1838, he was summoned to Peking, and the privilege accorded him of riding on horseback within the precincts of the imperial residence. In 1839, he received his seal as high commissioner, and proceeded to Kwang-tung, to put down the opium trade. This special appointment obliged him to decline the governor-generalship of the two Kiang, comprising the three provinces of Ngan-hwui, Kiang-su, and Kiang-si, to which he was nominated, but that of the two Kwang was soon conferred on him, to be held, as by Ki-ying and Su, together with his high commission. His edicts against the proscribed traffic; his measures to prevent both the trade in and consumption of the drug; his letter to the Queen of England, and his treatment of the British community, which forced them to retire from Canton, and brought on the war, concluded by the treaty of Nanking,—are part of the history of our intercourse with China. Upon the news of the troubles his energy had created reaching the court, the good intention of his illness availed him nothing; he was recalled to Peking, in September, 1840, to be tried for his life, as one who had increased the mischief he had been sent to remedy. He left Canton in May, 1841, and was banished to Ili. In October, however, he was restored to his former post as governor of the Yellow River; and 1842, was reported dead. Upon this, an imperial manifesto appeared, praising, in the highest terms, the principles and demeanour of the departed statesman, decreeing him a pall of honour, a libation, to be poured out by two princes, 1,500 taels for his funeral, and a place in the imperial cemetery. Early in 1845, notwithstanding, a work regarding foreign states, said to be composed by Lin* from materials collected at Canton, appeared at Su-chau, in Kiang-su; in February, he was gazetted to the governorship of Shen-si; and next, to the acting governor-generalship of Shen-si and Kan-suh, during the absence of the real incumbent, who was employed beyond the frontier against the Mahomedans, in their last outbreak, in 1847. He then closed his official career in that of Yun-nan and Kwei-chau, which he vacated. It may be mentioned, as complimentary to him, that an appointment recommended by him, to which the Board of Civil Office objected as informal, was approved by the crown. He was also so fortunate as to "soothe" a strong body of the Yé Fán, who were moving on the south-west frontier.

Report, which is in some degree trustworthy when it speaks favourably of the character of a minister in this country, has ever acquitted Lin of all charge of corruption. Filling in turn five of the eight governor-generalships or vice-royalties of the empire, he has been entrusted with the control, from first to last, of more than half the population of China Proper. His memorial representing the condition of Kiang-si, in 1832, during a period of extraordinary distress, evinces a personal attention to the sufferings of the lower classes seldom exhibited by those occupying similar positions; and he is the first of the children of Han, so far as we are informed, whose patriotism has been directed to the improvement of his countrymen, by placing before them evidence of the superiority of strangers, especially in the art of war. This may be said to have been the object of his work before alluded to; it formed the basis of another and a larger compilation, which has already passed through two editions.—From a native work, cited by Assistant-Secretary Wade.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

From communications received from the frontier, so alarming are the reports from all quarters, and especially from those most intimately acquainted with the Kafirs, and their movement in Kafirland, that the farmers along the whole line, from Graham's Town to the Orange River, are adopting every means in their power against surprise, and to secure their property against a sudden outbreak by the adjacent tribes. All the flocks and herds of the residents of the Fish River, Konap and Kat Rivers, have been driven back, the whole country towards Somerset, Graaff Reinet, and Cradock, being in numerous parts literally covered with the sheep, cattle, waggons, and horses of the retreating inhabitants. The loss will be, even under the most favourable circumstances, immense. The case is aggravated by the fact that this is the commencement of the shearing-season, the very period to which the pains-taking flock-master looked for the replenishment of his exhausted finances.—G. T. Journal.

Extract of a letter from Graham's Town, 3rd December:—"I know, from information derived from head-quarters, that the Kafirs (the Gaikas) are fully prepared for an immediate attack on the colony; that Col. Mackinnon dares not carry out his own measures, for fear of precipitating their outbreak, and that he has declared he will not take such responsibility on himself. In fact, all rule in Kafirland is quite paralyzed, the police and military having been ordered not to fire a shot, excepting in self-defence."—Port Elizabeth Telegraph, Dec. 5.

His Excellency Sir H. Smith landed at this port (East London) last night with his staff, the 73rd regiment, artillery, guns, &c., and is probably before this time already in King William's Town. The substance of the intelligence from that post, as conveyed in private letters, is as follows:—"The Kafirs had been very quiet for the last few days. It is stated by different parties who are moving about the country, and who can speak the language, that the spirit and daring of the war party is much on the decline. Sandilli is said to be much alarmed, and skulking in the bush. This chief is at present in the bush on the banks of the Goolah stream, a few miles above its junction with the Keiskamma river. He has few followers with him, mostly young men, headed by Anta, who is warlike and daring. The desire for war is as yet confined to the Gaika Kafirs. The Slambie tribes are very quiet. The chiefs Pato, Toise, and Seyolo, loyally profess their allegiance; but Umhala, it is said, is somewhat more reserved. The accounts from Krel's country are rather conflicting. The people of this chief have, however, it is stated, offered obstruction to the Kafir police in the execution of their duty. It is supposed that his Excellency's first demand will be the full payment of the fine demanded for the rescue of the cattle, which, it is supposed, will be satisfied. When this part of the business shall have been closed, it is then supposed that a reward of a large number of cattle will be offered for the persons of Sandilli, Anta, &c., and a smaller quantity for the disturbers of the public peace of less rank. By this step it is supposed his Excellency will be enabled to feel the public pulse in Kafirland. All the posts in this country are well supplied with all necessaries."—Frontier Times, Dec. 10.

The following information has been gleaned from private letters:—Lieut. col. Eyre, 73rd reg., commanding the right division, left King William's Town on the 16th, for the Kabousie; he will have with him more than 100 men of the Cape Mounted Rifles. Col. Mackinnon commands the centre, which is to take up a position in the vicinity of Fort Cox. This division will march from King William's Town to-morrow. At the post there will be three companies of the 6th, one of the 73rd, and all the dismounted men of the Cape Mounted Rifles, under Lieut. col. Napier. Col. Somerset will command the left division, which will proceed to Fort Hare. It is supposed to be the Governor's intention to dislodge the Gaikas from the country they now occupy. It is also believed that a demand will be made for the persons of Sandilli, Anta, and a few others implicated in the late disturbances; and it is supposed that a certain time will be given to the Gaikas to consider this demand. His Excellency intends to make Fort Cox his head-quarters.

It is stated that Sandilli has left the Goolah, and gone to the Quilli Quilli, where there is some inaccessible bush, fit only to be traversed by bucks and monkeys. His Excellency and his staff move to-morrow morning. Lieut. col. Stuart, of the 6th, will be commander of King William's Town, and all at King William's Town are under the protection of Jan Tzatzoe and his tribe, who are held responsible for the safety of the town.—Frontier Times, Dec. 17.

RANGOON.

The following is an extract of a letter from Rangoon, dated 29th December, giving an account of a terrible fire which occurred there on the previous day:—

"Rangoon is no more! Yesterday, at 11 a.m., a dreadful conflagration broke out in the heart of the town, defying every measure to check its progress. The Custom House, Main Wharf, Armenian Church, and the principal merchants' houses, are totally destroyed; whole streets of great length present to the view heaps of ashes, and so complete has been the destructive effects of the fire, that old inhabitants have difficulty in pointing out the site of their former residences. It is estimated, on a rough calculation, that at least 2,000 houses have been utterly destroyed, and the loss of property at the lowest estimate amounts to fully thirty lacs of rupees, while that of life is incalculable. The fire extended about two miles in length, and one in breadth, and in its fearfully rapid progress communicated to a number of country cargo boats loaded with inflammable goods of considerable value; from these the fire extended to the shipping in the river. Nine vessels, of which five had completed their lading, were burnt to the water's edge; and the remainder barely escaped destruction by slipping their cables, and anchoring on the Dalla side of the water. In the neighbourhood of the Armenian Church the fire raged with inconceivable fury; scarcely an article of any description could be saved, so rapid was the progress of the flames. A large portion of the natives saved themselves from destruction by rushing into the river, where they remained, deaf to every entreaty made to them to strive to arrest the progress of the devouring element. The Custom-house, in which was stored a large quantity of gunpowder, blew up with a tremendous explosion, causing death and destruction far and near; in fact, with the exception of a few mean huts in the suburbs, scarcely a single house remains of what once formed the large and thriving town of Rangoon. It is out of the power of language to express the misery and destitution that meet you on every side; the eye beholds whole families crouching in abject despair under the still smoking ruins, and thousands who have saved scarcely sufficient covering for the purposes of decency. A visitation so terrific in its nature has never before been experienced in this town. Whichever way you turn, the half-consumed carcasses of dogs, pigs, and other domestic animals, meet your gaze; it is altogether the most complete scene of misery and desolation that can be well conceived, and it will be many years, I fear, ere Rangoon again assumes its former importance as a trading port.

"The origin of this dreadful conflagration is somewhat remarkable. The Burmese ship Yathna ye Mahon had just dropped anchor on her arrival from Calcutta, when a native, induced by curiosity to see her, left a handy of oil on the fire in his house, and betook himself to the main wharf for that purpose. During his absence the fire, by some unaccountable means, communicated with the oil, and in an instant the house was in a blaze, which speedily communicated to the adjoining habitations, and in an incredibly short space of time the whole town was wrapped in one body of flame; a strong easterly breeze blowing at the time greatly aided the progress of the fire, and rendered its extinction hopeless."

The edifices at Rangoon were without exception of wood.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

No question has led philosophical inquirers more astray than that of the intellectual character and condition of the ancient Hindus. Men of great talents, great learning, and great research, have propounded the most discordant theories upon this subject. Sir William Jones, whose familiarity with Eastern literature gave much weight to his opinions, entertained the most extravagant notions respecting the value of Sanscrit literature. With reference to a Commentary upon one of the philosophical treatises of the Hindus, he says: "I am confident in asserting that, until an accurate translation of it shall appear in some European language, the general history of philosophy must remain incomplete; for I perfectly agree with those who are of opinion that one correct version of any celebrated Hindu book would be of greater value than all the dissertations or essays that could be composed upon the same subject." And again: "I can venture to affirm, without meaning to pluck a leaf from the never-fading laurels of our immortal Newton, that the whole of his theology, and part of his philosophy, may be found in the Vedas."

To this estimate of the scientific acquisitions of the Hindus of ancient times may be opposed that of Mr. Mill, who rates them proportionably low. "Whoever, in the present improved state of our knowledge," he observes, "shall take the trouble to contemplate the proofs which we possess of the state of knowledge and civilization amongst the Hindus, can form no other conclusion but that everything (unless astronomy be an exception) bears clear, concurring, and undeniable testimony to their ignorance." Even their astronomy he infers to have been of no great excellence, and in a great degree derived from other nations. "As the manners, the arts, and sciences of the Hindus," he adds, "are entirely correspondent with the state of their laws and institutions, everything we know of the ancient state of Hindustan conspires to prove that it was rude."

The true medium is the view taken by Professor Wilson, a more competent judge than either of these authorities, who thus sums up the question:

"The Hindus, by the character of their institutions, and by the depressing influence of foreign subjugation, are apparently what they were at least three centuries before the Christian era. Two thousand years have done nothing for them; everything for us. We must, therefore, in fairness, compare them with their contemporaries, with the people of antiquity, and we shall then have reason to believe that they occupied a very foremost station amongst the nations. They had a religion less disgraced by idolatrous worship than most of those which prevailed in early times. They had a government which, although despotic, was equally restricted by law, by institutions, and by religion. They had a code of laws in many respects wise and rational, and adapted to a great variety of relations, which could not have existed except in an advanced condition of social organization. They had a copious and cultivated language, and an extensive and diversified literature. They had made great progress in the mathematical sciences; they speculated profoundly in the mysteries of man and nature, and they had acquired remarkable proficiency in many of the ornamental and useful arts of life. Whatever defects may be justly imputed to their religion, their government, their laws, their literature, their sciences, their arts, as contrasted with the same proofs of civilization in modern Europe, it will not be disputed by any impartial and candid critic, that, as far as we have the means of instituting a comparison, the Hindus were, in all respects, quite as civilized as the most civilized nations of the ancient world, and in as early times as any of which records or traditions remain."

The Asiatic Society of Bengal appears of late to have felt some of the decrepitude of age, and has expressed its intention of taking an "Old Parr's life-pill," in the shape of a new code of bye-laws. The Society has long stood in need of some revision of its rules, which, however efficient in the outset, when its members were in earnest and its funds flourishing, are rather too lax for the present day. Some members, while they retain their names on the Society's list, have ceased to feel that lively interest in its proceedings which can alone maintain the vitality of a scientific body; while others, after enjoying the privileges of the Society for months, and even years, have retired without paying up their subscriptions. It has become difficult to get a meeting together, and when members do congregate, no work, properly so called, is effected. The Journal has shrunk into a periodical, mainly kept alive by Mr. Hodgson, Dr. Campbell, and a few other real votaries of science, and published at very irregular intervals. Some reform was imperatively demanded, and it has come with a vengeance. If these new bye-laws come into operation, the Society will substitute, for its moderately democratic form, a complete Venetian constitution, with an irresponsible council controlling all its movements. This body is to consist of fifteen members, two of whom will be secretaries, one the president, and three the vice-presidents, and it will concentrate in itself the whole management of the Society, and reduce all members, ordinary, honorary, and associate, to mere ciphers. It will possess the full power, not only of appointing and dismissing all paid officials, a power of comparatively little importance, but also of electing, "from their own body, sub-committees, or sections of Oriental literature, natural history, &c.," whose powers and duties are to be defined by the council, and who may be dissolved at the will of the same all-powerful body. This measure is one of vital interest to all who take an interest in the well-being of the Society, and who feel that the publication of papers on scientific subjects, by the learned men scattered over India, is a matter of high importance. Both these rules are taken almost verbatim from the new code, and we subjoin two others, equally subversive of the rights of the members of the Society:—

"The government of the Society, and the direction, management, and execution of its concerns, shall be intrusted to the council, subject to no other restrictions than are and may be imposed by the rules, and to no other interference than may arise from the decisions of the members assembled in general meetings.

"The council may, from time to time, make such regulations and issue such orders, not inconsistent with the rules, as shall appear to them conducive to the good government of the Society, and to the proper management of its concerns; and all such regulations and orders shall be binding on all the members, officers, and servants of the Society, provided that all such rules shall be reported for the information of the Society, at the next general meeting."

But this is not all. Rule 64 directs that "all communications addressed to the Society shall, in the first instance, be submitted for the consideration of the council, who shall cause to be drawn up a programme of the business of the ordinary general meetings, and no other business shall be brought forward at such meetings, unless it be declared to be urgent, and that it could not have been previously communicated to the council." It may also "exchange for other property, or otherwise dispose of any duplicate books, maps, or specimens, belonging to the Society, in such manner as may, in their opinion, best conduce to advance the objects and interests of the Society." Finally, only three members of this body are required to form a quorum.

It may be argued that a council of this description, being subject to election, is nothing more than a committee of working members, elected by the whole body, and were the Society placed anywhere but in Calcutta, we should subscribe to this interpretation. But all Indian residents are acquainted with the mode in which societies are managed in Calcutta. Few members are willing to abandon their drive or their dinners to attend the meetings, and fewer still to take any active part in the proceedings. The members of the council will always be able to secure a majority, and even if they are not, no business can be brought forward unless it has been previously submitted to their consideration and approval.

Some of the reforms incidentally introduced will, we think, meet with the approval of all real friends of the institution. Such, for instance, are Rules 13, 14, and 15, which are exceedingly strict with regard to the payment of subscriptions. No member whose subscription is above six months in arrear will be allowed to vote, and if the arrears extend over a period of more than twelve months, his name, after due notice, will be summarily removed from the Society's books. This rule will tend, we hope, to correct the exceeding irregularity in the payment of subscriptions which has for some time been so deplorably palpable, and gradually create a fund, which may be applied to the scientific objects of the association, by improving and increasing the museum, and enlarging the library. The privileges of ordinary members are also enlarged, and they are allowed to remove specimens from the museums, subject to rules hereafter to be framed by the council. We fear the last privilege will be liable to abuse, from the rapid changes in Indian society; for, although the council may doubtless guard themselves against any danger of losing the money-value of the specimens so removed, they will not be able to insure their return uninjured, and there are many objects of curiosity in the museum which no amount of money will enable them to replace. We hope the members who have drawn up and proposed these bye-laws will modify them to such an extent, particularly with respect to the exorbitant power of the council, as may really benefit the Society, or that the general body of members will steadily refuse their assent to the principal provisions.—Friend of India.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

WEDNESDAY, March 5, 1851.

THE speculations thrown out in the last Mail, as to the position of the Cabinet, were nearer the truth than we then anticipated. The experience of a narrow majority in one case, and of an actual minority in another, with the apprehension of future defeats, did break up the Ministry, or rather urged the head of it to make a show of retiring, in order to reveal the real weakness of his opponents. It appears that the Protectionists, the only Parliamentary party that can be termed an opposition, have had an offer of the government, and have reluctantly confessed their inability to accept it, and no combination of sections could muster sufficient numbers, talents, and experience,—the elements of political strength,—to form an administration. So that the vehicle of state, albeit for ten days in violent motion, like the carriage of the lady in Goldsmith's play, which incurred the imaginary perils of Crackskull Common, is still at the place from whence it set out. It seems to have been scarcely necessary to invoke the aid of so potent a necromancer as the Duke of Wellington to solve such a phenomenon as this,—that when the sovereign cannot obtain a new ministry, she must put up with the old one.

The result of the test to which the resignation of the Ministers has subjected their antagonists, judiciously used, may be converted by the former into an element of strength. They re-accept office now on their own terms, and upon a kind of compulsion, because there are none to whom the administration can be transferred. From this moment, the union of sectional parties against them, merely to inflict the humiliation of a defeat upon men who are not permitted to retire from office, will be mean and cowardly. As the House of Commons does not supply materials for another administration, it has virtually recalled the present to office, and is therefore, in a certain degree, bound in honour to support this as the only Government which, in the present state of parties, can be formed. Moreover, in two of the questions which caused the temporary dissolution of the Ministry,—namely, Free Trade and the Papal Aggression,—their policy is popular with the country. These and other considerations furnish advantages to the returning Ministry of which their own imprudence in other measures, and especially those of finance, can alone rob them.

Their real danger lies, in fact, in their financial policy. The source of all their embarrassments in this path may be traced to the unfortunate surplus. Had the expenditure exceeded the net revenue by some hundred thousands, they would have escaped with a few hard words from Messrs. Hume and Cobden, and perhaps a retrenchment of the estimates; but a surplus has called forth a crowd of hungry claimants, elbowing each other, but all joining in one chorus of disappointment at the unhappy budget.

Had the whole of the surplus been applied to the reduction of the public debt,—to which no less than £20,000,000 has been added since the Peace,—or to a diminution of the income-tax, or to the entire repeal of the window-tax, the Chancellor of the Exchequer would have encountered a more mitigated opposition than the storm he has raised by a good-natured but very ill-considered attempt to give partial relief to a few interests. The inauspicious incidents of taxation are felt not only in the imposition, but in the removal, of the imposts; for unless all are at once removed, when the process of remission commences, the selection of the taxes to be remitted is sure to create jealousy, and excite complaints of partiality and injustice.

For the reasons already given, we adhere to the opinion that this year's surplus should rub off some portion of the duty upon tea:

Te veniente die, Te decedente, canam.

THE competition of the American ships with our own for freights in the East, since the opening and expansion of the Californian trade, has been an unforeseen, but inevitable, consequence of the repeal of our Navigation Laws. The feats of the American clippers, which make the voyage from Canton to London in ninety-eight days, if this were all, would only apply a wholesome stimulus to our ship-builders and ship-masters; already the Aberdeen clippers threaten to beat their rivals in speed, and a British ship-builder has, in fact, offered to construct a vessel that shall "flog" the boasted Oriental. This species of rivalry is a perfectly fair one, and the losers, whoever they may be, will have no right to complain. The competition we speak of is of a different kind, wherein the Americans enjoy advantages from which British ships are, without compensation, altogether excluded.

A letter from Mr. Aylwin, late of Calcutta, addressed to Mr. G. F. Young, states facts which place the matter in a rather serious light. This gentleman,—who, it must not be forgotten, has been a determined opponent of the repeal of the Navigation Laws,—now avows that, if this measure merely threw open our Eastern trade in fair competition to foreigners, he should not much fear the result, as the intelligence and energy of his countrymen, he thinks, would counterbalance certain properties belonging to American shipping; that, "quality for quality, we can build our vessels cheaper, and (were legislative restrictions removed) sail them at a less rate, than the Americans;" but, since the repeal of those laws, the Californian trade has sprung into existence, and thrown vast advantages into the hands of our great maritime rival.

By the American Navigation Laws, the trade between California and the United States Proper is considered a coasting-trade, and consequently confined to American vessels. During the year 1850, there cleared out from the United States Proper, for California, nearly 1,100 vessels, the greater number built expressly for that trade, to be afterwards despatched to the eastward of the Cape of Good Hope, there, through their greater speed and accommodation, to compete with British shipping. What employment is there, Mr. Aylwin asks, for this enormous fleet of ships in the current year? Deducting 250 for the guano, coasting, and whaling trades, there remain 850 sent to San Francisco, which can find no local employment, and must proceed to the East, seeking return freights, and ready to bring cargo at any rate that will cover their actual return expenses. Assuming that only 250 will proceed to Calcutta, for example, there will be American tonnage more than sufficient for the total requirement of that port; and if the few American and other foreign vessels arrived at Calcutta have (as the fact is) caused freights seriously to decline, what will be the effect produced by the Californian fleet, which, it seems, is already beginning to appear, for the Bengal Hurkaru, of December 21, announces the arrival of "a large fleet of American vessels from California," most of which, it is added, were loading for Europe? "It is worse than useless," observes Mr. Aylwin,

"For a British shipowner to console himself with the idea that no American, or other foreign ship, can, for any length of time, continue to be sailed from Calcutta to this country at 25s. to 30s. per ton freight; as this is not the question, the real position of the case being, Does it or does it not pay the American to secure and accept 'for the round' 6l. to 10l. per ton from New York to Calcutta, via San Francisco; 25s. to 30s. from Calcutta to Great Britain; 15s. from Great Britain back again to the United States; or, in other words, from 8l. to 12l. 5s. per ton for a voyage which will occupy some fourteen to sixteen months: and will he or will he not be able successfully to compete with the British shipowner, who, although his vessel performs its direct voyage to Calcutta and back in about ten or twelve months, has only some 20s. to 25s. for outward freight as an equivalent and set-off against the 6l. to 10l. earned by the American?"

He is well aware, he says, that a certain number of these Californian ships had been chartered from Calcutta, as, whilst he was at New York, he was advised by an American house that, after the opening of the Californian trade, a large amount of American tonnage, which had proceeded to California, had, upon the repeal of our Navigation Laws, been chartered from Calcutta to this country at 2l. 10s. per ton.

In our Eastern trade generally, the outward freight rarely exceeds 20s. or 30s. per ton, whereas the homeward rates have averaged 4l. 5s. "So long as the British shipowner is only obtaining an outward freight of 20s.," Mr. Aylwin says, "whilst the American clipper is securing from 6l. to 10l. per ton, it is absurd and preposterous to expect that we can compete with their shipping in any market, which is capable of being inundated by the gigantic fleet that has been constructed for the Californian trade."

That these are the vaticinations of an alarmist, we have no suspicion. Mr. Aylwin assures us that, in his recent visit to the United States, he devoted much time to acquiring information about American shipping, and was astonished at its wonderful increase; "the whole seaward coast, from Maine to Louisiana, being literally dotted over with vessels in all stages of construction." Each successive arrival from America confirms this statement, telling of the augmentation of her mercantile navy, especially in the direction we have referred to. The intelligence recently received by the Canada, which brought advices from New York to the 13th February, announces that the Pennsylvania Senate had passed various resolutions relative to the establishment of a line of mail-steamers between Philadelphia, San Francisco and China, Norfolk and Europe, and the Times' correspondent at New York states that there were sixteen ocean steamers belonging to the port of San Francisco, besides forty-seven engaged in the river trade.

What are the conclusions we draw from this state of facts? That we should return, as Mr. Aylwin seems to recommend, and as Mr. Young openly requires, to our jealous navigation system? Certainly not. The Navigation Laws, as well as the whole protection theory, are abrogated; and if they were not repealed, it would be impossible to maintain them, in the existing condition of commerce, without sacrificing the very object for which they were framed. The shipping interest, like every other, must be left to fight its way through temporary difficulties, and if, owing to a combination of adverse circumstances, competition is impossible in one direction,—which is by no means certain,—our shipowners must devise some other channel. It is the necessary condition of a state of society in which the interest of the masses, not of the few, is the end to be attained, that, in the race of competition, some will occasionally rise and others be depressed, the depression of the latter stimulating them to fresh efforts, from which the many will derive an advantage.

EXAMINATION OF PERSONS NOMINATED DIRECT CADETS IN THE SERVICE OF THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY.

Resolution of the Court of Directors, dated 22nd January, 1851.—The following are the points upon which candidates are to be examined before they are passed as cadets:—

1. Each candidate will be required to write English correctly from dictation.

2. He should possess a competent knowledge of the ordinary rules of arithmetic, including the rule of three, compound proportion, simple and compound interest, vulgar and decimal fractions, and the extraction of the square root. He should also have read the first three books of Euclid.

3. In languages he should be able to translate into English passages from Cæsar's Commentaries, or from the first four books of Virgil's Æneid, and he will be further expected to parse, and show his knowledge of grammar and syntax.

The candidate will be required to translate, from French into English, an extract from one of the following works, viz. Telemaachus, Voltaire's Charles the XII., and Peter the Great. But the candidate will have the option of being examined in the Hindustani, in lieu of the French language, and in that case he will be required to translate, from Hindustani into English, an extract from one of the following works, viz. Bagh-o-Bubur, Tota Kuhanee.

4. In history, he should be prepared to pass an examination in Keightley's Histories of Greece and Rome, in Gleig's History of England, and in the History of British India, contained in Vols. 1 and 2 of the Edinburgh Cabinet Library.

5. In geography, he should possess a competent knowledge of the modern divisions of the world; the principal nations in Europe and Asia; the names of the capital of each nation in Europe, and of the chief cities of Hindostan; and the names and situations of the principal rivers and mountains in the world.

6. In fortification, he should have read some elementary work on the subject (Straith's Introductory Essay to the Study of Fortification, or Macaulay's Field Fortification), and have received some instruction in drawing.

Resolution of the Court, dated 5th February, 1851.—The examination of the candidates will take place before a board of examiners, to be convened for that purpose, at the Military Seminary at Addiscombe, near Croydon.

If the candidate has been confirmed as a member of the Church of England, he will be required to make a declaration to that effect. If not so confirmed, or if not a member of the Church of England, he will be required to produce a certificate from a minister stating that he has been well instructed in the principles of the religion in which he has been brought up.

The candidate will also be required to produce testimonials of good moral conduct, under the hand of the principal or superior authority of the college or public institution in which he may have been educated, or under the hand of the private instructor to whose care he may have been confided; and the said testimonials shall have reference to his conduct during the two years immediately preceding his presentation for admission.

The House of Commons, upon the motion of Mr. Tuffnell, have agreed to an Address to the Crown for "Copy of the Memorial addressed to the Secretary of State for the Colonies from the Cinghalese Episcopalians, respecting Wolfendahl Church; also, for copy of the Memorial on the same subject from the Dutch Consistory; together with copies or extracts of any correspondence between the Governor of Ceylon and the Secretary of State for the Colonies relating thereto."

EAST-INDIA REVENUES.

(Errors excepted.)

East-India House, 11th February, 1851.

JAMES C. MELVILL, Secretary.

EAST-INDIA RAILWAY.

The annual meeting of this Company was held on the 19th February, at the Office, Old Broad Street, Mr. J. Baxendale in the chair.

The secretary read the Report, an abstract of which appeared in the last Mail.

The Chairman, on moving its adoption, said that since it had been circulated they had received a most satisfactory Report from their engineer, Mr. Turnbull, with regard to the works. It went into considerable detail, and contained a great deal of information. From what he had read of it, he considered that it was very satisfactory, so far as the works were concerned.

Mr. Franklin complained that some of the items in the accounts were not correctly stated.

The Chairman said it was impossible for accounts to be more correct. They were carefully audited, and the directors could not spend a single penny without the consent and authority of the East-India Company.

The Report was then adopted, the dividend was declared, and the retiring directors, Messrs. J. Baxendale, J. Cattley, and A. Nairne, were re-elected, as was also the retiring auditor, Baron Goldsmid.

On the motion for confirming the forfeiture of certain shares being put,

Mr. Adams said, he believed that many of those shares belonged to persons who had died in India, and, in consequence of the necessity and difficulty of obtaining probates in England, the public in India were very much dissatisfied, and until that feeling subsided, it was not likely that persons in India would hold shares in the company. He hoped the subject would receive the attention of the directors.

The Chairman said, that, so far as he knew, the directors would be most anxious to meet the question in a proper manner, and deal with every case according to its merits.

The resolution confirming the forfeiture was carried.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PRESENTATIONS AT THE LEVEE.—At the Queen's levee, on the 26th February, the following gentlemen had the honour of being presented to her Majesty:—

Lieut. col. Neil Campbell, on return from India, by Lord Broughton.

Capt. W. E. Evans, on return from India, by Maj. gen. Sir G. Arthur.

Sir James Matheson, M.P., on being created a baronet, by Lord J. Russell.

Sir Benjamin Outram, C.B., on receiving the honour of the Bath, by Sir F. Baring.

Capt. C. P. Rigby, on return from India, by the Marquess of Douro.

Viscount Torrington, on return from Ceylon, by Earl Grey.

Lieut. W. H. Williams, on return from India, by Lord Blyney.

Lieut. Edwin Worsley, Madras army, by Lord Broughton.

Mr. Sydney S. Bell, puisne judge of the Cape of Good Hope, by Earl Grey.

THE GREAT EXHIBITION.—The Lords of the Treasury, having received an application from the Court of Directors of the East-India Company, requesting certain modifications of the regulations adopted and issued by the Customs with regard to goods imported from India for the Great Exhibition, have approved the following arrangements being made, viz. that their warehouse in New Street, Bishopsgate, and certain rooms in the East-India House, be deemed to be temporary bonded warehouses for the purpose required; that all packages arriving for the Great Exhibition be entered in the usual manner, to be warehoused at either place, and forwarded there for examination; that proper officers of the Customs' department be appointed to superintend these transactions; that the warehouses be kept open during such hours of the day as may suit the convenience of the Directors, and upon the examination of the goods being officially made and recorded, all the "free goods" be at once delivered to the Company, and such portions of the articles as may be subject to duty selected, arranged, and removed to the building in Hyde Park, under the usual regulations for removing goods from one bonded warehouse to another in the same port, as provided for under the 31st section of the Warehousing Act; and that such of the goods liable to duty as may not be selected for exhibition be removed to some recognized bonded warehouse, to be disposed of under the usual regulations. Their Lordships further require, as the condition of these special privileges, that the additional expense incurred by the Crown in consequence of this arrangement be borne by the East-India Company.

MEDALS.—East-India House, Feb. 25.—Her Majesty having been graciously pleased to assent to a medal being granted to the surviving officers and soldiers of the Crown and of the East-India Company who were engaged in the several services enumerated in the following list, including the officers and seamen of the Royal Navy, and the Company's Marine, who took part in the Burmese war; notice is hereby given that general and other officers, non-commissioned officers, and soldiers of the East-India Company's army, who are entitled to this honorary distinction, are to apply for the same to the Secretary to the Court of Directors of the East-India Company, and to send, at the same time, in writing, a statement of the claim, specifying in what action and at what period of time they served, accompanied by any certificates calculated to substantiate the claim.

List of Services for which the India Medal is to be granted.

Siege and storm of Bhurtpoor, January, 1826.

A CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.—Proposals have been issued by some leading commercial houses in the metropolis, for the establishment of a London Chamber of Commerce. These proposals have been circulated by Baron L. Rothschild, M.P., and Mr. Masterman, M.P., with the view of collecting the general views entertained of the project.

EAST-INDIA PATRONAGE.—Mr. Ross D. Mangles, M.P. for Guildford, a Director of the East-India Company, has lately placed at the disposal of the governors of St. George's Hospital an assistant-surgeonship in the East-India Company's service, for presentation to the most deserving pupil of the hospital.

A LIST OF THE WRECKES AND CASUALTIES which have been officially reported to have occurred between London and Dungeness, during eighteen months, from January, 1849, has been compiled by Mr. John Young, of Lloyd's, whence it appears that the number of vessels was 363, and the property lost amounted to upwards of £330,000, besides a large number of lives. The total extent of the loss, Mr. Young says, cannot be known, as numerous vessels are annually lost, with all on board, upon the Goodwin and adjacent sands, without the fact of their having been in that vicinity being known.

BOOKS.

A Year on the Punjab Frontier in 1848-49. By MAJOR HERBERT B. EDWARDES, C.B., H.E.I.C.S. Two vols. Bentley.

THE military reputation gained by the author of this work, and the announcement which preceded its appearance, that "nearly the whole of the first impression had been ordered by the London booksellers alone," made us eager to open the bulky volumes, which, after wading through their 1,340 pages, we closed with at least a proportionate degree of disappointment. In his ambition to make a large book, Major Edwardes has swamped with an immense mass of trivial, uninteresting, and well-known details, the little matter of an attractive kind he had to relate, and which, if he had been content to digest it into a modest narrative, might have furnished a single readable volume.

He commences with his mission to Bunnoo, in December, 1847, and the transactions of his three months' residence there. During this time, "the powerful, brave, and hitherto unconquered Vizeeree tribes," resigned their independence; the foundations of "the royal fort of Duleepgurh" were laid, and its walls raised to the height of twenty feet; the people and chiefs of Bunnoo threw down their own forts, 400 in number; a new town was founded, and a military and commercial road, twenty-five miles long, undertaken, through a formerly roadless valley. "In a word, the valley of Bunnoo, which had defied the Sikh arms for twenty-five years, had in three months been peacefully annexed to the Punjab, and two independent Afghan races, the Vizeerees and Bunnoochees, been subjugated without a single shot being fired."

The particulars of this successful dealing with a wild people, so creditable, no doubt, to Major Edwardes, had they been presented in a brief and simple narrative, would have fixed our attention and interest, which are dissipated by half-a-dozen tedious and wordy chapters, in the diary form.

From Bunnoo we are conducted into the adjoining countries of Murwut, Esaukheyl, and other parts of the Derajat, and entertained with a diary of marches, and descriptions of the country and people, much of which is taken, strange to say, from Mr. Elphinstone's "Cabul," of which long extracts are most unmercifully given, as if that valuable work had been originally published in a foreign tongue, or as if it had been little read.

Thus ends the first volume, which is as perfect an exemplification of the art termed "book-making" as it has been our fortune to meet with in a pretty long khidmat in our critical occupation.

Volume the second,—the frontispiece of which presents two portraits, one of "Nuwab Bhawul Khan," the other of "Dewan Moolraj;" the former entitled "My ally," the latter "My enemy,"—appeared to offer metal more attractive; but the bulk of it consists of extracts from the "Punjab Blue Book," whence the official despatches, detailing all the operations preceding the fall of Mooltan, and the capture of that fortress, are copied and inserted bodily, as well as sundry fragments, for no other reason, apparently, than because they contain the name of "Lieutenant Edwardes." In the new matter, which serves as a running commentary upon the republished official despatches, there is very little which appears to us to possess intrinsic interest or novelty. Major Edwardes contributes no assistance towards elucidating the causes of the outbreak at Mooltan, and the murder of Messrs. Vans Agnew and Anderson; many of his details are borrowed from the records of the trial, large portions of which, though they have been published before, and pretty extensively read, he has copied verbatim into his work. He censures the two unfortunate gentlemen for not adopting the course best suited to attach their escort, and for their indiscretion in occupying the fort before Moolraj's garrison had withdrawn; the dewan,

"his enemy," Major Edwardes,—though, in one of his public despatches, he expressed his belief that Moolraj was "involved in rebellion against his will," and though the ex-dewan's judges declared him "the victim of circumstances,"—he denounces, in unmitigated terms, not only as a "murderer," but an "assassin of his invited guests."

The only transaction respecting which Major Edwardes has furnished much additional matter is the battle of Kineyree, of which (in addition to the official report, which, as usual, is given in extenso) we have fifteen pages of original description, of an animated, but no first-rate, quality.

Had Major Edwardes taken the pains to condense the history of these transactions into a clear and continuous narrative, filling up deficiencies and correcting casual errors, he would have rendered this volume a readable one. Judging, however, by the general style of the work,—which is in the highest degree colloquial,—it must have been hastily and negligently put together.

The Bombay army will be gratified by the tribute paid by Major Edwardes,—a Bengal officer,—to their military character. When the rear of the Bombay column arrived at Mooltan, he says, "our soldiers crowded out to welcome them. Finer troops than were in this division never, perhaps, took the field in India. They were the first troops of the Bombay army which I had ever seen, and I beheld them with admiration. Their native material was inferior, but their marching order, dress, and general set up, was a closer approach to the British soldier than I had ever seen made by the Bengal sepoy. After seeing the two divisions work side by side in the second siege of Mooltan, I would also give the palm of discipline to the Bombay sepoys."

Scheme of a Seminary for the Sons of Officers; with Remarks and Suggestions regarding the diffusion of Military Education throughout the Army. Mortimer.

AFTER enumerating the inconveniences and risks, as well as heavy expenses, attending the education in Britain of the children of officers serving abroad, especially those of the East-India Company,—who are obliged to send their children home at an early age,—the author develops his scheme, founded upon a plan suggested by the home-agent of the Military Orphan Society of Bengal, which was approved of by the managers of that society in 1841, though not adopted (for reasons assigned by the author), the present scheme departing from the agent's in respect to shareholding, for which he substitutes a plan "that requires no risk or outlay on the part of officers, nor any delay, trouble, or expense in collection, and effectually does away with all those evils which lead to the subversion of other schools." The plan of the agent was to erect a building, capable of providing ample accommodation for 300 pupils, from 6 to 18, separated into classes; and the modifications proposed by the author would, he expects,—upon a supposition that officers would pay on an average £40 a year for each child,—secure to the institution a clear profit of £3,000 a year, after providing for boarding, clothing, and properly educating the children in the neighbourhood of Edinburgh. The author gives the minute details of these calculations, and suggests the mode in which the scheme may be carried out, so as to realize the results we have before mentioned as its recommendations.

Kote-i-Kafiree, or the Infidel's Fort, in Esaukheyl, is infamous in local annals, not more from its name than from a treacherous and cold-blooded murder committed there on an Afghan chief, named Shah Walee Khan, by order of Rajah Soocheyt Sing. He had done the Sikhs great service, but the rajah either wanted him no longer, or suspected him, so made a pretence of wishing to cross the hill of the Infidel's Fort with his army, and sent Shah Walee Khan, with a party of Sikhs, to explore a road for the artillery. At the hour of noon-tide prayer, the Afghan spread his scarf and knelt down to pray. The Sikhs, in the midst of his genuflections, struck off his head, then hurried back to camp, and related, with well-feigned terror, how the insurgents in the hills had surprised their party and killed their guide. The rajah listened with tears in his eyes, sent for the corpse, and buried it with the utmost honour.—Edwardes's Year on the Punjab Frontier.

A singular and handsome style of embroidery, peculiar to the city of Aurungabad, in the Nizam's dominions, is formed by using the wing of certain coleopterous insects for the patterns: these are green beetles, imported from Kandesh. Many females of decayed Musulman families, who once enjoyed all the comforts of life, find employment in this species of manufacture, and thus are enabled to earn a subsistence.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.—Under the provisions of an Act of Parliament, recently obtained, this Company now offers to future insurers a low rate of premium without participation in profits, or a moderate scale of premiums with four-fifths of the profit to be derived from all assurances hereafter effected.

The divisions of profits which heretofore have been made Septennially, will in future be made Quinquennially, the first of such divisions to be declared in June, 1855, when all participating policies which shall have subsisted at least one year at Christmas, 1854, will be allowed to share in the profits.

At the several past divisions of profits made by this Company, the reversionary bonuses added to the policies from one-half the profits, amounted, on an average of the different ages, to about one per cent. per annum on the sums insured, and the total bonuses added to the four septennial divisions exceeded 770,000*l*.

FOREIGN RISKS.—The extra premiums required for the East and West Indies, the British Colonies, and the northern parts of the United States of America, have been materially reduced.

LOANS granted on Life Policies to the extent of their values, provided such policies shall have been effected a sufficient time to have attained in each case a value not under 50*l*.

In the FIRE DEPARTMENT a return of profit was declared on the 5th of June upon the premiums received on all policies which had been in force seven years at Christmas, 1849; and the same is now in course of payment daily (Friday and Saturday excepted), between the hours of Ten and Three o'clock, at the Head Office, and also by the agents in the country districts.

Annual Premium for assuring 1,000 rupees:—

CIVIL.			MILITARY AND NAVAL.
Age.	With Profits.	Without Profits.	Age.	With Profits.	Without Profits.
30	Rs. 33	Rs. 31	30	Rs. 38	Rs. 35

50	82	77	50	84	79

All holders of Policies in India on the Profit scale, who may have paid five annual premiums, will be entitled, at the expiration of the fifth year, to a year's profit, calculated on the average of the preceding five years; such profit to be paid in cash, or to go in diminution of the future premiums payable, or to be added to the sum assured by the policy, at the option of the holder, after the calculation of the profits shall have been made in London.

After the expiration of 1851, the profits will be declared annually, and the payers of five complete annual premiums be regularly entitled to a participation therein, with a like option as to the mode of application.

Parties assured in India for Life shall, on their return to England for a permanency, and on the first half-yearly premium becoming due, be entitled to come upon the English rates of premium, and be placed under the rules and conditions of the Society there obtaining.

All parties assured for Life, or for terms other than for Life, whatever the number of payments, or the permanency or otherwise of their residence in Europe, shall, after completing a full year from the date of their quitting India, and on the first half-yearly premium thereafter becoming due, be entitled to a reduction of their premium to the English rates, such reduced rates being continued during their further residence in Europe.

Notices of Assignments of Policies will be duly registered at the Office of the Secretaries.

The Society also grants ENDOWMENTS and DEFERRED ANNUITIES for India, the Tables for which, with full information, may be had at the Office of the Family Endowment Society, No. 12, Chatham Place; or at the Office of the Secretaries in Calcutta, Messrs. GORDON, STUART, and Co.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 9th of May, 1849, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums. This will be found a liberal reduction if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premiums.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year

At the ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of this Society, held on Thursday, the 28th day of November, 1850,

BENJAMIN PHILLIPS, Esq., F.R.S., in the Chair,

The accounts for the ninth year of the Society's business ending the 30th September, 1850, and the Report of the Auditors thereon, having been read and duly received, the following Report of the Directors was also read—

REPORT.

"The Directors are happy to have it in their power to inform the Shareholders, that the financial year ending the 30th September, 1850, has furnished the most satisfactory results which they have yet had to lay before the Shareholders, whether as regards the amount of new business done, or the extent of losses incurred.

"During the year ending the 30th September, 1850, there have been issued no fewer than 569 policies for assurances, amounting to 213,399*l*. 16*s*. 11*d*., and yielding an annual revenue, on the new policies thus effected, of 9,183*l*. 13*s*. 7*d*.

"This exceeds the amount of business transacted by this office in any former year, not only in the number of policies, and the sums assured by those policies, but also in the yearly premiums payable upon them.

"The following table shows the results of the business transacted in each year since the establishment of the Society:—

YEAR.	Number of New Policies issued in each Year.	Sums Assured by New Policies in each Year.	Annual Premiums payable on New Policies in each Year.
1842	130	£55,245 1 0	£1,882 13 7
1843	208	87,830 16 11	4,092 18 6
1844	197	80,415 8 6	4,120 4 3
1845	258	103,014 11 0	5,563 17 0
1846	199	83,700 14 5	4,985 8 5
1847	313	113,542 4 9	4,237 3 4
1848	412	124,458 17 8	4,980 2 8
1849	475	201,712 15 6	7,496 0 6
1850	569	213,399 16 11	9,183 13 7
Total.	2,761	£1,063,390 6 8	£47,422 1 6

"It is plain from this statement, that in the course of a very few years, the Society has acquired a very large amount of business, equalled by few of the Assurance Companies in the metropolis.

"The Directors wish to impress on the Shareholders the important fact that this rapid acquisition of business is not owing to any accidental cause, but has taken place uniformly throughout the whole field of the Society's operations, showing clearly the confidence reposed in the Society by the Public.

"It is also most gratifying to be able to report that the losses by deaths during the past year have been less than in any preceding year since 1844; from which it appears that, with the exception of the three first years of the Society, when the mortality has been less than in any other.

"The Directors have only further to state, that the Members of the Board going out of office by rotation are Edward Doubleday, Esq., and Robert Bentley Todd, M.D.; and the Auditors also going out of office by rotation are James Parker Deane, D.C.L., and Martial Lawrence Welch, Esq., all of whom, being eligible, offer themselves for re-election.

"The Directors and Auditors retiring from office having been duly re-elected without opposition, the usual votes of thanks were given."

Prospectuses, containing very full tables of rates, forms of proposal, and every other information, will be forwarded, postage free, on application to any of the Society's Agents, or to the Secretary, at the chief office, 25, Pall Mall.

INTERESTING FACT.—The following singular and authentic case of restoration of the human hair is worthy of observation, more particularly as it relates to an article of high and universal repute during the last half century. Mr. A. Herrmann, of Queen Street, Soho, had been quite bald for some time past, and had tried various preparations for the recovery of his hair, but without any beneficial result. He was then induced to try the effects of "Rowland's Macassar Oil," and after daily applying it for about two months, he, much to his gratification, had his hair quite restored, and now possesses a beautiful head of hair. The fact speaks too strongly for itself to require comment.—Bell's Weekly Messenger.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL is highly and universally appreciated for creating and sustaining luxuriant tresses.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR is a preparation of unparalleled efficacy in improving and beautifying the skin and complexion; and ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, is invaluable for its beautifying and preservative effects on the teeth and gums.

*BEWARE OF SPURIOUS IMITATIONS.—The only genuine of each bears the name of "ROWLAND'S," preceding that of the article, on the wrapper or label. Sold by them at 20, Hatton Garden, London; and by chemists and perfumers.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS AGAIN

SUCCESSFUL IN THE CURE OF A BAD LEG.—Extract of a letter from Mr. Brotherton, of Stangart, near Bootle, Jan. 15, 1851:—"To Professor Holloway, Sir,—After my wife's confinement in 1848, she caught a severe cold, which settled in her right leg and foot, causing it to swell to an alarming size, ultimately forming into about twenty wounds, presenting a most fearful appearance. The pain she endured was almost insupportable, and the treatment of her medical attendants did no good whatever. She therefore resolved to give your Pills and Ointment a trial, and I am happy to say they have effected a perfect cure."

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

GREAT EALING SCHOOL, MIDDLESEX, for the SONS OF GENTLEMEN, in number FIFTY, conducted by DR. FRANCIS NICHOLAS, of WADHAM COLLEGE, OXFORD, and established in the same family upwards of 130 years. The house is delightfully situated in the village of Ealing, and has been lately built by Dr. Nicholas, with baths, and every requisite to promote the health and comfort of his Pupils. The Schools and bed-rooms are particularly airy, and four acres of land are laid out for play, gymnastic, and cricket grounds. Ealing is the first station on the Great Western Railway.—Terms, for board, separate bed, laundress, church sitting, education in the English, French, Latin, and Greek languages, Writing, Arithmetic, Mathematics, Geography, with the use of the Globes, FIFTY GUINEAS PER ANNUM: for TWELVE Pupils under Twelve years old, in the junior department, which is conducted by Mrs. Nicholas, with the assistance of Ladies, FORTY-FIVE GUINEAS, and includes Dancing and Drilling. Extra charges for books only, and the personal wants of the Pupil. Residence during the VACATIONS (six weeks at Midsummer, also at Christmas), One Guinea and a Half per week—no extras.

THE NEW TOOTH-PICK TOOTH-BRUSH,

thoroughly cleansing between the teeth when used up and down, and polishing the surface when used crossways, the hair warranted never to come out; in four strengths—viz. No. 1, hard; No. 2, less hard; No. 3, medium; No. 4, soft. The double anti-pressure nail-brush, which does not divide the quick from the nails. The triple hair-brush, which thoroughly searches and cleanses the hair in one-fourth part of the time of any other method, and acts as both comb and brush combined. The medium shaving-brush, being a selection of the strongest badgers' hair, so well secured in the socket as never to come loose. And, though last not least, the newly-invented "Renovator" clothes-brush, which makes an old coat look like a new one, and a new coat to look new double the usual time. Invented and made only by ROSS and SONS.

THE ATRAPILATORY, or LIQUID HAIR DYE.—The only dye that really answers for all colours, and does not require re-doing but as the hair grows, as it never fades or acquires that unnatural red or purple tint common to all other dyes. ROSS and SONS can, with the greatest confidence, recommend the above DYE as infallible; and ladies and gentlemen requiring it are requested, if convenient, to have it done the first time at their establishment, which will enable them to use it afterwards themselves, without the chance of failure. They think it necessary to add, that, by attending strictly to the instructions given with the dye, numerous parties have succeeded equally well without coming to them.

BOTANIC WATER and BEARS' GREASE.—When the hair is becoming thin, and falling off, the only effectual remedy, besides shaving the head, is the use of the two above-named articles, applied alternately—the botanic water to cleanse the roots from scurf, and as a stimulant, and the bears' grease as a nourisher. If any further evidence was required of the virtues of bears' grease for renovating and preserving the hair, Mr. Catlin's account of the quantity used, and the length of hair obtained, by some of the North-American Indians, would be a sufficient answer.—ROSS and SONS, who first introduced the use of bears' grease in this country, and who fat and kill the animals, recommend the public to purchase none other but with their names and address printed on the pot, or the chances are, their obtaining a spurious article.

HUXLEY'S SURGICAL CAOUTCHOUC ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE-CAPS, &c., are now daily patronized by all the leading members of the profession. Their superiority over every other fabric for artificial support is admitted by all who inspect them. They afford an equal, comforting, and permanent pressure on every portion of the limb, and are drawn on with the facility of an ordinary stocking. H. and Co. guarantee a comfort and support hitherto unknown in any other form of bandage. It is well known that all kinds of Surgical Stockings lately used have a tendency to impede the free and healthy action of the muscles, thereby producing relaxation and great diminution of the limb. Only to be obtained at HUXLEY'S Parisian Shirt Warehouse, 5, Vere Street, Cavendish Square.

HAILEYBURY COLLEGE.—A Married Clergyman, M.A. of Oxford, who has long prepared for the preliminary examination with marked success, will have vacancies after Christmas for pupils above 13 and under 17 years of age. His system of instruction ensures the most rapid progress. The judicious course of study required by the H.E.I.C. of candidates for Haileybury is equally desirable for general students, but in case of such applicants, the recommendation of a Director or Member of Parliament is required.

Address Rev. H. M. A., Messrs. W. H. Allen & Co., 7, Leadenhall Street.

TO LATE RESIDENTS IN INDIA.—

TRUE MADRAS CURRY, and MULLIGATAWNEY PASTE and CHUTNIES.—Messrs. BARRIE and Co., Vepery, Madras, to enable their old correspondents returning from India to continue the use of the celebrated Condiments, have made arrangements to forward regular supplies of the above, packed in glass jars for family use, at 1s. 9d. and upwards, which may be had of GROSSE and BLACKWELL, Purveyors to Her Majesty, 21, Soho Square; FORTNUM, MASON, and Co., Piccadilly; and of the principal Sauce Vendors throughout the kingdom. EAST-INDIA AGENCY.

C. R. THOMPSON & Co., WINCHESTER HOUSE,
OLD BROAD STREET, LONDON,
And 10, ORIENTAL PLACE, SOUTHAMPTON.

The following are the objects to which the Agency is more particularly devoted:—

TO COMMISSION and Agency Business generally, whether intrusted to them by Civil or Military Officers of the Queen's or East-India Company's Services, or by Regiments, they give prompt and careful personal attention.

THE SUPERINTENDENCE of Outfits of every kind, securing Passages, shipping and insuring Baggage and Goods of every description, for all persons proceeding to India, or other part of the East, either by the Overland Route, via Marseilles or Southampton, or by the Sea Voyage.

THE RECEIPT of Letters from or for India or elsewhere, and their transmission by the first opportunity.

THE DESPATCH, from our London Offices of Parcels, for all parts of India, China, Ceylon, &c., by the Overland Route, on the 17th of each month; as well as the clearing and forwarding from Southampton of Passengers, Baggage, and Parcels, arriving home by the Steamers.

THE EXECUTION, on the best terms, of Orders of every description from India, especially those for Wines and Spirits, of which they keep in their Cellars a choice collection of every variety, expressly for their Indian Customers.

THE RECEPTION of the Wives and Children of Civil and Military Officers arriving from India, the Clearance of their Baggage, and its despatch to their destinations, and the placing of Children at Schools, whereat, according to the instructions and wishes of their Parents, the best education and training will be secured to them. The Receipt of Remittances for them while at home, and payment of Bills on their account.

THE RECEIPT also of Civil and Military Pay, Pensions, Annuities, Dividends, &c., by Power of Attorney; with the Execution of any other Business at the India House, Bank of England, or elsewhere.

Drafts and Letters of Credit on Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, granted for large or small sums.

Remittances, or reference for payment, will be necessary from those who have no open account with them.

HOME EDUCATION IN ENGLAND.

A MARRIED ENGLISH CLERGYMAN (incumbent of a parish situate in the most beautiful and healthful part of Surrey) continues to receive YOUNG CHILDREN to EDUCATE, under his own and his wife's personal superintendence.

For further information, apply to Messrs. C. R. THOMPSON and Co., East-India and Army Agency, Winchester House, Old Broad Street, London.

The Gutta Percha Company, Patentees, Wharf Road, City Road, London.

EAST-INDIA ARMY and GENERAL AGENCY,
136, LEADENHALL STREET.

We have taken into partnership Mr. JAMES CUNDY, late of the Madras Army.

In thus having secured the services of a gentleman who, by long residence in India, has gained considerable practical knowledge, we feel that we have best consulted the interests of our old friends, and, we hope, show good reason for an accession of new.

On personal application at our office, or on inquiry by letter, every information and assistance will be given to parties arriving from or intending to embark for India, China, and the Colonies, and constituents in England will have prompt attention paid to their wishes, and will find in the Reading-room the latest newspapers, as well as every information they may require on all topics relating to India.

Detailed Estimates of Outfits for Writers, Cadets, and Assistant-Surgeons arriving have been prepared with much care, showing the comparative expense between a journey overland, via Egypt, and a voyage by the long sea route.

Drafts and Letters of Credit on Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, and China, in large or small sums, are also granted at this Agency.

KIDSTON'S MECHANICAL LEECH.

W. M. KIDSTON and Co., 18, Bishopsgate Street Without, London, in directing the attention of the medical profession to their newly-invented instrument, termed "Kidston's Mechanical Leech," think it would be superfluous and presumptuous to make any comment in its behalf, further than drawing their attention to the testimonials in its favour, published in the "Lancet" of September 20, and in the Pharmaceutical Journal for October.

Full instructions for use will accompany the instruments.
Price per set of instruments, i.e. three "Leeches," or Vacuum Glasses, with Puncturing Instrument electro plated, in neat morocco case, complete,—£2. 5s.

EMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION.

IMMIGRATION being much required in AUSTRALIA,
NEW ZEALAND, &c., and as the supposed expense of an OUTFIT often prevents individuals emigrating, S. W. SILVER and Co., CLOTHIERS, OUTFITTERS, and CONTRACTORS (having a large interest to maintain in those Colonies), have been advised to make known that they can supply a comfortable OUTFIT, including Bedding, for MALE or FEMALE Emigrants, from Four Pounds (net) upwards, or less (Two Pounds if needful), and for Children in proportion, at No. 4, BISHOPS-GATE STREET WITHIN (opposite the London Tavern), where lists will be given on application.

S. W. S. & Co., being the makers of nearly every article in all the Outfits they supply, and as one of their objects is to promote EMIGRATION, they neither receive from Agents, or pay the too usual commission to any person introducing Passengers to be fitted out, so that the Passage and Outfit may be procured at the least possible expense; but they will, on application, advise Passengers how to obtain the most economic passage to the Colonies. They have a Representative in every Australian Colony, to whom they ship Clothing monthly; thus they would forward small parcels free of expense.

NAVAL and MILITARY OFFICERS, MIDSHIPMEN, CADETS, CIVILIANS,
LADIES, &c., are outfitted as heretofore, at the CABIN-PASSENGER OUTFIT-TING Warehouse, Nos. 65 and 67, CORNHILL (the Emigration Outfitting being exclusively at No. 4, BISHOPS-GATE STREET WITHIN), LONDON, and each branch at St. GEORGE'S CRESCENT, LIVERPOOL.

EAST-INDIA UNITED SERVICE AGENCY, 53, CHARING CROSS, and 25, SPRING GARDENS.

MAJOR R. D. WHITE (twenty-nine years in the Bengal Army) will be happy to receive gentlemen connected with India and the Colonies, or attend to their written communications.

Passages secured by Sea or overland; Houses or Apartments engaged; Regimental Messes; Wines and Stores; Outfits, &c., supplied; and every description of Agency business transacted.

No charge for subscription to the Agency or Rooms, but every information furnished.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE affairs of the Nizam, which have been so long a fertile topic of animadversion and speculation in the Indian journals, seem now approaching a real crisis. The overland Delhi Gazette, of February 9, announces, "upon good authority," that final orders had been received from home for the immediate annexation of the Hyderabad territory. The ample provocation given by the Nizam, by the virtual refusal to fulfil his engagements, is a full justification of a certain amount of territorial appropriation, and we have no reason to doubt that the Governor-General is fully authorized by the home authorities to take a portion of his highness's possessions in discharge of his pecuniary obligations; but we believe there is no intention, except with the consent of the Nizam himself, of seizing his territories in gross. It is probable that the province of Berar will be taken in satisfaction of the debt of 600,000*l.*, the interest of which is a heavy charge upon his revenues; and we find, from a letter from Sholapore, dated the 1st February, published in the Bombay Times, that a rumour then prevailed at that station, that Berar had actually been made over by the Nizam to our Government.

The fort of Daroor, which, as stated in our last Summary, had been seized by a party of Rohillas, who were confined there, surrendered to the force sent against it under Brigadier Beatson. The force, amounting to 2,100 men, with eight pieces of ordnance, having arrived by the 26th January, operations were commenced the next day. Though the besieged must have felt that all hope of success was vain, they determined to hold out. Two bastions, mounted with heavy guns, were first silenced, and their batteries disabled; the artillery then took up a position about 400 yards from the nearest wall; the parapet was easily knocked away, and in thirteen hours the breach was pronounced practicable, and was to have been forced on the morning of the 4th; but, apprehensive of the consequences of further resistance, the Rohillas announced their readiness to surrender unconditionally, and having laid down their arms at the top, came out through the breach, the gateways having been built up by themselves. They numbered in all about 140; two had been killed, and six or seven wounded.

If we can trust a statement in the Mofussil papers, the hill tribes occupying the difficult country between Peshawur and Kohat, against whom the great Napier himself took the field ineffectually, have evinced, in a very striking manner, their disposition to maintain, not merely peaceful, but amicable, relations with our Government. It is stated that, on the 22nd of January, the 1st Punjab Irregular Cavalry

ARRIVAL OF MAILS.

The Hindustan, with the mails, left Calcutta February the 8th, Saugor the 9th, Madras the 13th, Point de Galle the 16th, and Aden on the 27th ult., reaching Suez on March the 4th.

The Queen, with the Bombay mail, left February the 17th, and arrived at Aden on February the 26th.

The Pekin, with the China mail, left Hong-Kong January the 30th, Singapore February the 7th, and Penang the 9th, arriving at Point de Galle on February the 15th.

The mails thus brought were taken on to Alexandria, arriving on the 7th inst. They reached Malta on the 14th (per Ripon), and Marseilles on the 18th inst. (per Medusa).

The Ripon, with the remainder of the mails, may be expected at Southampton on the 26th inst.

Via Marseilles, on the 7th and 24th; if either of these days be Sunday, then on the 8th or 25th.

Postage (must be paid here), letters, under $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. 1s. 10d.

" " " " " $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. 2s. 3d.

" " Newspapers, 3d. each.

* * The Marseilles mail of the 24th overtakes the Southampton mail of the 20th, at Malta; they arrive in India together.

Letters and papers for CHINA should be sent by these mails, and must be pre-paid.

(Our publication commenced at 6 o'clock this morning, March 22.)

DATES OF ADVICES.

Bengal	Feb. 8	Ceylon	Feb. 14
Madras	— 13	China	Jan. 30
Bombay... .. .	Feb. 17.

(Daly's) left Peshawur for Kohat; that they marched through the Khyber Pass without firearms, under the escort of a mountain chief; that they reached Mutnee the day they started, and Kohat the day following, right through the defile, and over the mountain ridge at one stretch, encountering no molestation or obstruction in their way. The marching without arms, in order to allay the jealousy of the hill-men, is so improbable a circumstance, that the Bombay journals doubt the fact.

The Governor-General had left Rawul Pindee, on his way to Peshawur, on the 30th January, for Kalabagh, on the Indus, where the river forces its way through a tremendous chasm in the Salt Range.* In this neighbourhood the geological surveys, of which Dr. A. Fleming is the head, are at present employed, and his Lordship is said to be desirous of meeting the savans within the field of their labours, and of inspecting the tremendous rapids of the Indus, along with the officers of the Indian navy appointed to meet him at Kalabagh.

The Delhi Paper hears that the visit of the Governor-General to Cashmere has been postponed, either because his Lordship doubts the propriety of placing himself in the hands of Goolab Sing, or because the Maharajah is quietly throwing difficulties in the way. The Marquess is engaged in endeavours to promote education amongst the people of the Punjab, and has for this purpose made a grant for schools at Umritsir, and an annual allowance for teachers. The public inquiries elucidated the fact, that amongst a population of two millions and a half in and around Lahore, about eight per cent of the boys were receiving instruction at school or from private teachers. Some curious details connected with this subject are given in another column. The Mofussilite states that the Local Committee of Umritsir have received orders to prepare a large building in that station, to be used as a College, as the Governor-General deems that spot the best adapted to commence the work of national education in the Punjab. An annual grant of Rs. 5,000 has been made for the endowment of the College, and there appears every probability of a successful issue to the experiment.

Other measures for the amelioration of the country are in progress. The Baree Doab canal, with its branches, now in process of construction, extending over 450 miles, will water an area of above half a million of acres, now barren, and supply occupation and support to probably a couple of millions of people: it will cost half a million sterling, with a charge of 20,000*l.* a year for maintenance, yielding yearly a direct income, of 120,000*l.*, or twenty-four per cent., with probably twice as much in indirect return. A new cantonment for troops is proposed to be established in the Doab. The civil officers throughout the country have been instructed to forward, before the 1st March, to the Board of Administration, a detailed report on the state and prospects of the various departments under their charge, as the Governor-General, it is said, purposes to prepare for the Court of Directors a general report of the condition of the country.

The Commander-in-Chief was at Agra on the 8th February.

The Delhi Gazette learns from Nowgong, that, in consequence of some distasteful conduct on the part of the young Rajah of Serree towards his subjects, there is likely to be a disturbance in that quarter. No outbreak had taken place at the time of writing, but the whole country round about is said to be in a very disturbed state, so much so, that it was thought probable that a couple of guns, supported by a suitable escort of cavalry and infantry from Nowgong, would be required to arrange the differences.

Bajee Rao, the ex-Peishwa, died at Bhitoor on the 28th January. He has received annually eight lacs of rupees as a pension since his deposition, in 1819, from a throne which he had disgraced.

"Bajee Rao was the reputed head of the Mahrattas during the stormy period when they played with the British for the stake of empire, and lost it; but he only contributed ignoble crimes to the general efforts of his race. He never won a battle nor observed a treaty. Cruel and treacherous by nature, he loved best to wreak his vengeance on the helpless, and hoarded his worst perfidies for his benefactors. His nominal lieutenants, Holkar and Scindia, disobeyed him during peace and overthrew him in war, and, but for the interference of the British in the treaty of Bassein, he would have disappeared from the public stage nigh half a century since. How he requited the English is well known; but it was not until all endeavours to maintain pacific relations had been tried and found hopeless, that the last decisive campaigns against him were entered upon. They were signalized on his part at the commencement by the murder of a distinguished native ambassador to his court, and their close was marked by the slaughter of two inoffensive English travellers."

The Calcutta papers mention but few local incidents. The Friend of India announces, with the most unfeigned satisfaction, that the first inch of the ground was made over to the railway establishment on the 25th of January, "one year, two months, and eleven days after the despatch of the letter from the Court of Directors, in which they twice enforced the necessity of accelerating this preliminary measure." The Morning Chronicle states that, at Balikal at least nine hundred Coolies were busily at work every day at the railway embankments, which were rapidly rising. The Roshoshagar, a native paper, indicates some of the peculiar difficulties which these works will encounter in India:—

"On account of the famous Musjeed of the Pandooah falling within the boundary of the railway line, a show of resistance and violence had been offered by the good Mussulmans of the place towards the railway people when they expressed a desire of levelling it to the ground, adding that the British Government must first extirpate them before they break down their place of worship. The magistrate of Hooghly, with a company of native infantry, went to the spot, and the whole hubbub was soon at an end."

The Hurkaru publishes letters addressed by the Calcutta Chamber of Commerce to the Board of Control, the East India and China Association, and the directors of the Peninsular and Oriental Company, complaining of the slowness of the steamers employed by the latter in conveying the mails on this side Suez. "The way in which the mails are carried by the East-India Company betwixt Bombay and the Red Sea," observes the Hurkaru, "is exciting considerable dissatisfaction; on two occasions lately, the steamer has run short of coals, and had to burn up decks, spars, &c., to enable her to get into port."

The chief feature in the local intelligence of Bombay is the arrival of Mr. A. Mackay, the gentleman deputed by the Manchester Chamber of Commerce to inquire into the cultivation of cotton in India, who was received by the Chamber of Commerce at that presidency with much distinction. The railway contractors, Messrs. Faviel and Fowler, had commenced operations on that part of the line of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway which lies between Sion and Parell, where an embankment will be constructed over the flats. The temporary contract held by Mr. Balston was about to be put an end to by the chief contractors. The cotton crops throughout Kattiawar are said to be most luxuriant, notwithstanding the outcry raised respecting the paucity of rain during the last monsoon. "This fact," the Telegraph remarks, "would rather tend to prove, what has been often advanced, that irrigation after a certain point is not required for the production of the cotton plant here, whatever may be the case in America, and with the Sea Island cottons. This, however, is one of those vexed questions which our newly-arrived cotton commissioner, Mr. Alexander Mackay, will have to form his own judgment on." Cholera continued to prevail at Bombay.

* See "History of the Punjab," vol. i. p. 6.

From Ceylon we hear that the subjects of roads and a railway are the chief topics of discussion at Colombo. The Observer says:—

"Those who have revived the idea of a railway, and pressed the project on the attention of Sir George Anderson, acknowledge that a government guarantee is absolutely necessary to induce capitalists to embark in the undertaking; and it is pretty generally understood that some merchants who had an interview with the governor went the length of intimating that they were prepared, in aid of this specific purpose, to submit to the re-imposition of export duties! A policy so retrogressive and so suicidal as this will not meet with general favour, and as the choice of the formation of a railway calculated to benefit directly only a portion of the country appears to involve the suspension of all making of roads, opening up and connecting various districts rich in population or in natural resources, we fear we must, for the present, forego the hope of seeing Colombo and Kandy connected by the great triumph of modern skill and human energy—the rail."

It appears that, in a space of 24,000 square miles, the dimensions of the island, there is at present a total length of roads, fully or partially formed, of 3,039 miles.

The China papers announce that the insurrection in Kwang-tung and Kwang-sè appears to be entirely at an end; that the report of the late Commissioner Lin's death proved to be correct; and that a document had been circulated, purporting to be under the vermilion pencil, in which orders are given for the degradation of Keying and Muh-chang-ah, ministers of some repute. "The document, as circulated in the north," the Friend of China says, "is found, on comparison, to differ materially from that promulgated in the south, and we are somewhat disposed to doubt the edict's authenticity; there is a party in the realm who appear very fond of making the youthful sovereign indulge in vituperations against the barbarian; Keying's principal offence, it is alleged, being undue severity to 'the black-haired flock,' his countrymen, in order to gratify his friends of 'the red-haired race.'"

The invalids in the 59th regiment were decreasing in number.

The apprehensions expressed in our last Summary, founded upon the complexion of the advices from the Cape of Good Hope, of another Caffre war, have been, we regret to find, fully realized. A digest of the latest intelligence is given under the appropriate head.

The General Screw Steam Navigation Company's mail-packet Bosphorus, which brought this intelligence, arrived at Plymouth at 10 o'clock P.M. on the 12th inst., having left the Cape of Good Hope on the 2nd of February. She was delayed at Sierra Leone three days by an insufficient supply of fuel.

COTTON CULTURE AT COIMBATORE.

At the meeting of the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of India, 11th January, a communication was read from Dr. Robert Wight, superintendent of Government cotton experiments, regarding late operations in Cotton culture at Coimbatore. The communication is dated 23rd October, 1850; the following are extracts:

"The results of my last year's sowings proved on the whole very satisfactory, even though, owing to the lateness of the season at which we commenced operations, and the unusually early setting in of the spring rains, we lost a great part of our crop. It was nearly the middle of November before our first sown field was fair above ground, and it was nearly the middle of December before our sowings were completed. To compensate for that disadvantage, we had some rather heavy falls of rain in December, and, a most unusual circumstance, a heavy fall in January. These rains, aided by bright rather warm weather, and two or three waterings (for the whole of my land was susceptible of irrigation), brought on the crop beyond my expectations, and picking, to a considerable extent, was in progress about the end of March. On the 2nd April our spring rains commenced, and from that time until the end of the month we had almost daily showers, sometimes amounting to heavy falls of rain, accompanied by cloudy weather. These clouds and rains proved most injurious to our crops, which, notwithstanding, were so heavy in the first instance, that we realized on different fields, in the course of the season, from 300 to 800 lbs. of kupas per acre. The field that yielded the largest produce was an exceedingly dark-coloured, very light, almost sandy, alluvial loam, usually cultivated as rice-fields. But for the injury sustained from the early and continued rains, it is my impression the yield from it would not have been under from 1,200 to 1,400 lbs. per acre. The bushes were low, but spreading, and bore, I think, the fullest crop I have ever seen. I have been thus particular in specifying the character of the soil of this field, for the purpose of showing the description of soil on which the best crop I have ever raised was produced. With a view to solving a question I have often heard mooted, viz. the exhausting qualities of a cotton crop, I have sown the same field a second time, and, side by side with it, an adjoining portion of the same patch of ground which bore a crop of rice last season. Our past experience is unfortunately adverse to the hope of success for this trial, all our former ones having tended to show that the American cotton-plant is a very exhausting one. The quantity of cotton grown on Government account this season is, owing to the many applications for seed, inconsiderable, only about fifty or sixty acres. The natives seem at length to have resolved to give the 'Europe' cotton a fair trial, and I this season distributed to neighbouring ryots upwards of 10,000 lbs. of seed, exclusive of about as much more, which I sent to a distance. They could not have hit on a more favourable one, so far as it has yet gone; and I now fondly trust all will have good reason to be thankful for having at length so far overcome their prejudice against the new plant as to give it an honest trial. This important change was partly brought about by the appearance of two or three European merchants in the market, asking for American cotton; partly by the liberal prices now ruling, and partly, perhaps, by the enormous crop obtained on a small patch of recently-cleared forest land amounting to about 1,600 lbs. per acre. Unfortunately for the grower, there was only about three-quarters of an acre, but from that small piece of ground upwards of 1,000 lbs. of kupas was picked."

THE KHOOND AGENCY.

We are happy to be enabled to state that the operations of the agency during the past season have apparently been very successful. Capt. MacVicar, the officiating agent, has made a tour through the districts of Boad, and the Meriah, or human sacrifices, appeared to him to be entirely suppressed. The only symptoms of a relapse were observed in some remote and sequestered villages of Boad, in a district bordering upon Chinna Kimeddy. The difficulties in this quarter arose from its proximity to a country where the rite still prevails, and which of course influences by its example the public opinion of the villages around. The temptation to transgress the law, in these particular villages, has been very great, and it was rumoured that a sacrifice had taken place in 1849; but since that period the people have not again relapsed. Of course, the frontier villages will always be in danger; but the fact that the efforts of Government have been crowned with such complete success, in every other part of Boad, is full of encouragement. According to the latest information which has reached us, the officiating agent was in a district called Majee Desee, a territory bordering upon Boad and Patun. The atrocious custom of sacrificing human beings exists in this country, but there is every probability that the vigorous efforts which the Government is now making will result in its speedy and final extinction. At present everything promises well; the chief of the district is favourable, and the people have a salutary dread of incurring the displeasure of the British Government. The number of the victims rescued in this part of the country has, however, been small, owing to the peculiar customs of the district. In Boad and Goomsoor the people rear their intended victims for adoption and concubinage, and subsequently immolate them. It is, therefore, comparatively easy to rescue them in the intermediate period. In Majee Desee, on the other hand, the victims are purchased when required, and immolated at once. Three victims have, however, been rescued, and more are expected. Capt. Frye, the officiating assistant, is at present in Chinna Kimeddy, and has received some victims. It is said to be his opinion, that the efforts of Government have finally suppressed the atrocious custom throughout the whole of the low country.

An attempt has also been made on the part of Government to carry this good work still further, and to sow the seeds of future permanent improvement. After great opposition, the officers employed in suppressing the sacrifices have succeeded in establishing three schools in Upper Goomsoor, and they have now twenty-seven children under instruction. This is a small number, but the people are fast losing their aversion to education, and it is a highly encouraging fact that the teacher was himself rescued from immolation, and educated at the Mission School at Berhampore.—Friend of India.

EDUCATION IN THE PUNJAB.

The Executive Government of Lahore has turned its attention to the moral and intellectual condition of the people. It appeared by inquiry that there was no foundation whatever for the belief so generally entertained of the universality of brooding apathy and ignorance among the Sikhs; that in the Lahore division in particular a large number of children are at all times being instructed, and a strong desire for information prevailing among them, of which it was most important to take advantage. In the Lahore division there were found to be 1,385 schools, with a gross attendance of 11,500 pupils, or, on an average, about eight to each. In the city itself there are 28,692 houses, and 143 schools, with an attendance of 2,243 pupils; of these, 16 are devoted to the instruction of Mahomedan girls, and there are no fewer than 128 of these taught to read the Koran—the teachers are women. At Kusoor and its neighbourhood there are 102 schools, with 843 pupils. In Umritsir there are 15,206 houses, 40 schools, and 861 pupils. The population of the Lahore district amounts to about 2,500,000, and 388,271 of both sexes are believed to be of an age fit for school; of these, 194,135 are males, of whom 11,500, or 6 per cent., are already at school—about two per cent. more receive private instruction—say 8 per cent. in all; a state of matters brought to pass by the Sikhs themselves, and eminently creditable to those we have been accustomed to call barbarians, but still leaving ample room for the labours of the schoolmaster. We could neither give with such minuteness nor accuracy the statements of education or population in Bombay, after an occupation of two centuries, as the Lahore board can give in relation to the districts around them, after a possession of less than three years. The magnitude, wealth, intelligence, and position of the city, pointed to Umritsir as one of the most fitting places for the commencement of the Government scheme of instruction. Mr. Montgomerie, the commissioner (a man indefatigable in his exertions for the cause of native improvement, to whom the whole was intrusted), selected Mr. Saunders, and the choice appears to have been most judicious. For the carrying out of the scheme 300*l.* was allowed at the outset, by Government, for the erection of a school-house, and 500*l.* a year for the maintenance of the schools. The teachers were all to be natives of the Punjab—the head-master to receive 190*l.*, the first assistant to receive 70*l.*, stipends which, when the cheapness of living is considered, may be deemed most liberal; both these were to teach English as well as other branches. Persian, Oordoo, Hindee, and Sanscrit masters were also to be employed, at from 39*l.* to 90*l.* a year. Similar arrangements, on a scale proportioned to their wants, will be made in other cities so soon as the Umritsir scheme is at work.—Bombay Times, Feb. 17.

BRICKS.

The military occupation of Lahore by British troops, in March, 1846, rendered it necessary to search for some more "bricks" to build the sepoy's lines in the rownee, the officers' eyries on the bastions, and the cantonment at Arnarkulee. The neighbourhood became a vast subterraneous hive, in which men, not bees, were occupied in digging for the requisite "material." Bricks that had served to support the superincumbent walls of buildings reared 200 years ago, were brought to light, and used up on the occasion of the emergency.

The buildings for which they were required were scarcely finished, when "annexation" rendered it necessary to "changer tout cela." Permanent cantonments were to be raised, hospitals to be built, private dwellings to be erected, and sweeping changes to be introduced in all directions. But where the "bricks" were to come from was another question. The few remaining monuments of bygone days were condemned at once, the ruthless hand of the "executive" engineer was stretched out in every direction: even private dwellings fell before the pickaxe, and the phouras; garden walls shared the same fate; serais, that had cost lacs, were doomed by one stroke of the pen, (and sometimes without) and the whole face of the country was covered in all directions with kuranchees, carts, donkeys, and bullocks, conveying, towards Meean Meer, the remnants of what had been bricks.

But the supply was not equal to the demand. "More bricks" resounded on every side. The executive wrote to the superintending engineer to say he must have millions; the board of administration were asked to sign warrants for the destruction of the few remaining gateways, mosques, and tombs. They complied, but ventured to ask why "bricks" were not made? The answer was that bricks could be "made" fast enough, but that "fuel" was not to be had in sufficient quantity to "burn" them.

The ears of the Governor-General himself resounded with the cry of "more bricks for Meean Meer." As a last resource (the eyries on the walls, the huts beside them having been carried away), it was determined to pull down part of the wall itself, and the decree has gone forth. The wall is being demolished to the extent of three and a-half feet, the debris are being conveyed to the British cantonment; the walls of the barracks are being built with particles of bricks that would have been elsewhere rejected as rubbish; the time of the workmen is wasted in squaring them, the energies of the executive in raising buildings that will be no credit to the engineer, and the resources of the Punjab frittered, because new cantonments must be built, and a change is necessary. This is the last known adventure of the "Lahore brick;" what the next may be it is impossible even to guess.—Lahore Chronicle, Jan. 15.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL, of Dec. 24 last, arrived at Calcutta on Feb. the 1st, per Oriental.

SIR C. NAPIER.—The Governor-General is so confident that he is right, that we hear, he has said, that if Sir Charles Napier does not publish he will do it himself.—Englishman, Feb. 7.

JOTEE PERSHAUD'S TRIAL was to commence in the Sessions Court at Agra, about the 15th Feb. He will be arraigned on four distinct charges of fraud and subornation of perjury, connected with the hire of bullocks at Bijnore, Bareilly, Delhi, and Agra. The alleged frauds involve about two lacs of rupees.

N. W. BANK.—The Court of Enquiry on the officers connected with the North West Bank commenced its sittings on the 6th February.

ROADS.—It appears from Government Orders, that another line of road has been placed under the superintendence of Major P. W. Willis, superintending engineer of the Grand Trunk Road, in addition to that officer's present charge of 1,209 miles, viz. from Gyretty Ghaut opposite Barrackpore, up to Umballa, including the several branches along the line. This new line is about one hundred miles in length, and extends from Patna to near Sherghotty, and is said to be at present very insufficiently drained, but no doubt, under the able superintendence, it will soon be made as perfect a line of communication as any branch of the Grand Trunk Road. We have been informed that the superintendence is now at Sherghotty, actively engaged in personally advising and directing the engineer officer in charge, Lieutenant Peile, in order that nothing may be wanting to render the road efficient as a line of communication. Lieut. Peile has been lately appointed by Government, executive engineer of this Patna branch road, under the immediate orders of Major Willis. We also learn that it is the intention of Major Willis, after he has thoroughly inspected the above line, to proceed down the country as far as Gyretty Ghaut, where his presence is much required. Mr. Turnbull, the chief engineer to the East Indian Railway Company, has solicited an interview, for the purpose of consulting with this officer on some very important points relative to carrying the line of railway across the trunk-road in several places. It is intended that the railway should cross the grand trunk-road in three places in the lower provinces, viz., over the Sutping Khall, the Koontie Nuddie, and near the Durmah pass.—Delhi Gaz. Feb. 9.

PUNJAB PRIZE-MONEY.—A distinguished general officer of the Queen's service has, with Sir Walter Gilbert, sent an earnest remonstrance to Government on the subject of the Punjab prize-money. There are evident signs that the officers of both armies are now beginning to labour in earnest, to obtain justice for themselves and their comrades in arms.—Ibid.

THE ANNEXATION OF THE NIZAM'S DOMINIONS, if carried out, cannot fail to be of advantage to the Bengal army, as it will be found necessary to draft a large force of the Madras troops into the Deccan for the purpose of preserving order and ridding the country of the vast clouds of mercenaries, Arabs and Rohillas, who may be expected to occasion trouble for some time to come. The probability is that the districts in Central India, now occupied by the southern army, will be again garrisoned from Bengal, and we do not see how that could be accomplished, without an increase to the present strength of the establishment perhaps in all its branches. A portion of the irregulars, at present in the pay of the Nizam, may be taken into service, but the government will doubtless prefer to rely on its own regular forces, for the permanent occupation of the country.—Delhi Gaz.

A COMMITTEE consisting of a lieutenant-colonel of infantry and two subalterns of artillery, was appointed a short time ago to draw up a code of regulations for the Indian army. The constitution of this committee has been much and justly criticised, but we hear that the work which it has to do is only to frame a body of general regulations on the plan of those prepared for the royal army, and which will not materially interfere with the standing orders of the different branches of the service.—Hurkaru, Feb. 7.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF arrived at Cawnpore on the 23rd. A well-attended levee took place at the Assembly Rooms at twelve o'clock, and after the introduction of all officers at the station, Sir William returned to the hotel, and in the evening all met again with the fair of Cawnpore at the ball, given by Brigadier J. Ashburnham, C.B., in honour of Lady Gomm. The ball was opened by her ladyship and the Brigadier, and dancing continued unabated till twelve o'clock, when the company sat down to an uncommonly good supper. The Brigadier proposed the health of Sir William Gomm, and a hearty welcome to him. The Chief returned thanks in a short but very appropriate speech, in which he said that, should there be cause for any army again to assemble, he would feel proud to have the gallant officers around him, who wore so many distinguished marks of service, under his command. The party broke up about three o'clock A.M. In the afternoon of the 24th, the troops were drawn up in contiguous columns, quarter distance, on the Dragoon parade ground, and marched round in quick time; they then went through several manœuvres, at the conclusion of which his Excellency expressed himself highly satisfied with the steadiness of the troops and the charging up the columns, which was done at a tremendous pace. The chief left Cawnpore early on the morning of the 25th, to pass the day amongst the ruins of Kanouge.

OUDE.—A correspondent of the Hurkaru, writing from Kotbun, near Juanpore, says:—"I have been enjoying the cold season, shooting round the Oude frontier, and have been much struck with the marked difference, the moment the boundary of the Company's territory is crossed, both in regard to the extent of the cultivation, and its comparative pooriness. In the Nawabi, every man you meet carries his sword and shield, matchlock or spear, and sometimes two of the offensive weapons, and the thakoors keep up regular establishments of fighting men. Nor is this system entirely confined to the Oude territory. I visited two young men, brothers, who reside on this side of the boundary, and have land on both sides; their dwelling was surrounded by a loopholed wall, and they can turn out 500 fighting men. The British authorities are obliged to wink at this. Without such a defence they would not be safe from attacks from enemies in the Nawabi."

THE CAVALRY BONUS FUND.—The Cavalry Fund, for the purchasing out of lieutenant colonels, appears to be reascutated, and Lieut. colonels Worrall, Taylor, and Hawkes, are said to be about to take the bonus. This will give promotion to three majors, as follows:—

7th Cav.—B. T. Phillips, a major of the 28th Sept. 1841;
4th do.—Wm. Mactier do. 13th Jan. 1842;
9th do.—P. F. Story do. 4th April, 1842;

and even then, the cavalry branch will be behind all the arms of the service, as regards the rate of promotion from major to lieutenant colonel, and this in the face of their fund having first come into operation some twelve years back, when some four or five lieutenant colonels were bought out, after which came, as might have been anticipated, a stagnation of promotion in the ranks of the field officers.—Hurkaru, Jan. 9.

THE MILITARY BOARD.—The Calcutta Gazette has announced that the Governor-General had appointed a committee, consisting of Major Kennedy, the consulting engineer of Government, Major Baker, of the engineers, and Mr. Charles Allen, of the civil service, to investigate the system of public works at this presidency. We believe that the official designation of their duties does not convey any adequate idea of the circle which they embrace. Indeed, it is well known that the investigations of this committee have not been confined to that single branch of the public service, but include the entire organization and working of the Military Board, which have for some time been the subject of increasing animadversion. The committee have recently, we believe, taken the evidence of the members of that Board, of its past and its officiating secretary, of some of the officers employed under it, and in general, of all those who were able to throw any light on the subject. From this investigation, Government will obtain a body of evidence, which may, and perhaps will, become the basis of a new and improved organization of the board, and relieve it from the sobriquet of the dilatory board. A report like this, founded upon a minute as well as a comprehensive investigation, must be considered an indispensable preliminary to any reform of the system. Lord Dalhousie deserves no little credit for having set the example of appointing committees of inquiry to search out the evils which time has been breeding in our public institutions, and to examine the defects of the old machinery. This is the third committee of the kind which he has appointed within the last eighteen months, and we feel certain that the result will prove so beneficial to the administration, as to lead to similar appointments regarding other departments.—Friend of India, Jan. 23.

THE MILITARY FUND.—The annual meeting of the Military Fund, to which so much interest and importance has been attached by recent events, came off in Calcutta on Wednesday last, and resulted in the election of twelve directors, by the sixty members who were present. The usual monotony of such meetings was broken by a great variety of discussions, carried on with much earnestness, and more or less of acerbity of feeling. The most important of the propositions made, was one which would have totally subverted its present constitution. It was proposed to break up the existing direction, and throw the management of the fund at once into the hands of Government, with an officer, appointed by Government, on Rs. 1,000 a month, to work it. We are happy to find that the proposal met with little encouragement. In our humble judgment, such a measure would have inflicted a deep and very unmerited stigma on the army. For what more severe reflection could have been cast upon its officers than thus to have practically affirmed, that while they were fully competent to manage all the complicated details of those departments of public duty which are entrusted to them by the state, there did not exist sufficient public spirit, or energy among them, for the safe and efficient management of a fund which involved the dearest interests of the widows and orphans of their deceased comrades?—Friend of India, Feb. 6.

REMARKABLE NATIVE PROPHECY.—The Citizen of January 29 quotes a curious old prophecy, uttered by the astrologers of the Gwalior Court, and published in the Agra Ukhbar in June 1844. The astrologers, on being questioned as to the future prospects of the Lahore Government, declared, that the chivalry and greatness of the Sikhs and the British, would be gloriously displayed on the right bank of the Sutlej and before Lahore, and, after five sanguinary engagements, the dominion of the Sikhs would cease for ever. The five engagements, singularly enough, correspond with Moodkee, Ferozeshuhur, Aliwal, Chillianwallah, and Guzerat.

EXECUTION OF VERY.—Francis Silvestre Very, a youth of seventeen, the perpetrator of the Ice-house murder, underwent the last sentence of the law on the 30th January. He died with great firmness, but apparently without the smallest contrition for the crime he had committed. He confessed himself the sole murderer of Knox, and declared that, though he could have hung his three associates, yet as he had planned the robbery, he thought it but right to take all the responsibility. He is said to have made disclosures, yet unpublished, as to other deeds of violence in which he had taken part or which had come to his knowledge. Two petitions to the judges for a reprieve were signed by about seventeen hundred people of all classes; but their Lordships declined to stay the course of law.

EARTHQUAKE AT CHITTAGONG.—The Sultan ul Akbar of the 26th January, states that, on the 7th, Chittagong was visited by a dreadful earthquake. Many of the local buildings, and a wall of the Dewany Adelut, were demolished in consequence, and the mud of the ponds situated in the district was observed thrown up above the surface of the water. Twenty of the labourers who were working at the side of a mountain, perished, by the falling of a large piece of stone upon their heads. Such a phenomenon was unprecedented in the memories of the oldest inhabitants alive.

KOHAT.—A recent communication from Kohat says, that rapid progress is being made by Lieut. Garnett, the executive engineer officer, in getting the fort at that place into a defensible condition.—The 2nd Punjab cavalry were expected to pass through Kohat, en route to Bunnoo, in the course of a few days.—Lahore Chron. Feb. 5.

MOOLTAN, 10th Jan.—There is great improvement in the health of all—not more than 60 in hospital in the whole station. One officer has leave to the hills for a year, the rest have all recovered. The fort has been particularly healthy throughout. Very few deaths, amongst the Europeans fewer than the usual average at most healthy stations, and comparatively few cases of sickness."

MAJOR MAYNE, at present commandant of the Govr.-General's body-guard, is likely to succeed Col. Beatson in command of the cavalry division of the Nizam's army, on the arrival of the Govr.-General's camp at Rawul Pindee, and Lieut. W. A. Thomson to succeed Major Mayne.—Delhi Gazette.

EARTHQUAKE AT MOOLTAN.—Extract of a letter from Mooltan, dated January 10th:—"We were last night roused from our slumbers by the shock of an earthquake, about six minutes past ten, which lasted for eight seconds, and was the most violent I have yet felt in India. The vibrations were from east to west—one officer who lives over one of the gateways, describes the rocking to and fro of his room as not a little alarming; the sepoy below ran out, thinking the gateway was about to fall on them, but no damage was done—there was a second shock equally violent as the first. The air was closer than usual all the previous evening, and the wind quite lulled."

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

PHYSICIAN-GENERAL JOHN WYLIE.

Physician-General John Wylie, M.D., F.R.C.S., and C.B., having applied for and obtained permission to retire from the service, the Right Honourable the Governor in Council cannot allow him to quit India without conveying to him in this public form, the strong assurances of the pre-eminent sense which he entertains—in common with every authority under, or in concert with whom Dr. Wylie has acted—of his very valuable and highly meritorious services throughout a lengthened period of thirty-seven years.

2. Physician-General Wylie has the proud distinction of being the first medical officer of the Madras army who has been admitted to the Most Honourable Military Order of the Bath, a distinction conferred upon him by his sovereign, in reward more especially of his gallantry in the memorable conflict of Corygaum, when, as honourably noticed by the Governor-General and Commander-in-Chief in India, he repeatedly "led on the sepoy to charges with the bayonet."

3. The Governor in Council feels that it would be utterly impracticable to enlarge in the compass of a farewell order on Dr. Wylie's great merits as a devoted public servant, and his Honour in Council must therefore content himself with recording his cordial and unqualified concurrence in the sentiments expressed by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, on the occasion of Dr. Wylie's retirement, and which will be specially submitted to the Honourable the Court of Directors.

MADRAS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NATIVE JUDGES.—The Madras U. S. Gazette mentions the case of a late principal sudder ameen of Chingleput, whose long and meritorious services had earned for him the esteem of the government of that presidency. On his decease, his widow applied to Government for a pension, but it was discovered, on inquiry, that her husband had left a sum of Rs. 18,000, besides a considerable jaghire. The petition was therefore rejected, but the Government, in order to show their regard for long and faithful services, ordered the four sons of the deceased to be educated free of expense, at the Madras University. "The favour," observes the journalist, "is kindly and gracefully conferred, and will prove to the native population, that the Government feel they cannot better reward an old servant, than by enabling his descendants to pursue the same career."

CRICKET.—A match at the noble game of cricket was played on the Island, Madras, on two successive days last week, between the Madras Club and the officers and men of the centre division, headed by General Sewell. This club won, the centre division giving up the match at the conclusion of the second innings of their opponents.—Athenaum, Feb. 3.

SCHOOL OF INDUSTRY.—A meeting of a very interesting kind was held at the Polytechnic Institution, on the 11th inst., Sir Henry Pottinger in the chair, attended by most of the men of weight and influence at Madras, both in the service and out of it. The object of the meeting was to take steps to establish a school of industry at the presidency, in connection with the School of Arts, with the view of providing employment for the labouring classes, improving, by the introduction of European machinery and skill, the industrial processes of the natives, and discovering and developing the vast resources of India. The project owes its rise to the indefatigable energies of Dr. Hunter, who has been encouraged to attempt its execution by the unanticipated success that has attended the working of the School of Arts.—Ibid. Feb. 13.

THE HYDRABAD correspondent of the Madras Spectator states that the Resident, General Fraser, has demanded that the insolent Chaoos, who tore Major Babington's jacket, as related by us in a former issue, should be given up to him. The Arab leaders are, however, exceedingly indignant at the demand, and have represented to the Nizam, that the surrender of the Chaoos may be made a precedent for the surrender of their own persons.

THE RIG VEDA.—We perceive that Dr. Muller has published a portion of the Rig Veda. This publication ought to be regarded as a remarkable era in the history of Sanscrit literature. We ought to feel grateful to Dr. Muller, and his munificent patrons (the East-India Company), for thus rescuing one of the sublimest productions of the Hindu intellect from destruction, and committing it to the custody of the press.—Hindu Chron., Jan. 22.

COURT-MARTIAL.

LIEUT. WALTER CHARLES BRACKENBURY, 30TH N.I.

Head Quarters, Choultry Plain, Jan. 9, 1851.—At a general court-martial held at Waltair, on Nov. 26, 1850, Lieut. W. C. Brackenbury, 30th N.I., was arraigned on the following charges, viz. :—

1st. For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having, after his arrival at Madras, on Jan. 23, 1849, failed to return, or in any way satisfactorily to account for, a lady's gold watch, the property of Assist.-surg. R. H. Rennick, entrusted to his charge by the said Assist.-surg. Rennick, at Masulipatam, in the month of Nov. 1845, for the purpose of taking to England to be repaired, and regarding which said watch he, Lieut. W. C. Brackenbury, afforded no information during his absence from India, although more than once written to on the subject by the aforesaid Assist.-surg. Rennick.

2nd. For unbecoming conduct, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having, at Cuttack, on Oct. 23, 1849, when in the command of the C. Comp. of the 30th N.I., irregularly employed Homed Saib, pay-havildar of the said comp., in procuring for him a loan of 50 Cos' Rs. from Lutchee Bae, a poor woman, resident at the said station, which said loan he received, on condition and promise of repaying the same on the issue of pay in the following month of Nov., but the amount of which loan he, Lieut. W. C. Brackenbury, left the station without paying, and has never since paid.

3rd.—For conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having neglected to obey the orders of his commanding officer, Maj. W. C. McLeod, 30th N.I., by failing to reply as directed to the following official letters to his address, written by order of Maj. W. C. McLeod by Lieut. F. N. Smith, adjutant of the said regiment, namely:

Letter dated Nov. 14, 1849, requiring him, among other things, to inform the aforesaid Lieut. Smith of the result of a communication said to have been made by Lieut. W. C. Brackenbury to England, dated April 16, 1849, on the subject of Asst. Surg. Rennick's watch (meaning the watch alluded to in the first charge).

Letter No. 265, dated Dec. 6, 1849, directing him among other things to inform the aforesaid Lieut. Smith whether he had received a reply to his, Lieut. W. C. Brackenbury's letter to England, Apr. 16, 1849, on the subject of Assist. Surg. Rennick's watch (meaning the watch alluded to in the first charge).

Letter No. 266, dated Dec. 6, 1849, directing him among other things to reply through the aforesaid Lieut. Smith to a letter to his address from the mess secretary of 41st N.I. written under the orders of Maj. G. Logan, commanding the same regiment, on the subject of a debt due to the mess of that regiment.

Letter No. 279, dated Dec. 17, 1849, requiring him, among other things, to acquaint the aforesaid Lieut. Smith of the result of a communication made by Lieut. W. C. Brackenbury to his agents in London, namely, Messrs. Robertson & Co., in April, 1849, on the subject of a bill granted by Lieut. W. C. Brackenbury to Mons. Calliez, of Paris, for the sum of 49l., on the aforesaid Messrs. Robertson & Co., and also to furnish authentic copies of his (Lieut. W. C. Brackenbury's) correspondence on the subject of the aforesaid bill; and requiring the said Lieut. W. C. Brackenbury to reply to the letter above specified, No. 279, without loss of time.

Letter No. 7, dated Jan. 7, 1850, calling among other things for the explanation or information required by letters above specified, namely :—No. 237, dated Nov. 14, 1849; No. 265, dated Dec. 6, 1849; No. 266, dated Dec. 6, 1849; and No. 279, dated Dec. 17, 1849; directing that the same should be furnished by the return of post, and requiring his (Lieut. W. C. Brackenbury's) reason for not having obeyed the orders issued through Lieut. Smith in the above letters.

First additional charge.—For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having, after his return to India from sick furl, to Europe on Feb. 23, 1849, until March 21, 1850, dishonourably failed, with one month's exception, to continue the payment of instalment of Rs. 100 a month, suspended by permission during his absence, in liquidation of the amount due with interest on a loan of Rs. 3,000, granted to him by the Agra Bank on his bond, executed Nov. 19, 1844, the condition of which bond being, that such loan was to be liquidated by regular monthly instalments of Rs. 100; and for the due fulfilment whereof, the late Lieut.-Col. C. Wilford, 40th N.I., and Capt. C. E. M. Walker, 30th N.I. were joint securities; he, Lieut. W. C. Brackenbury, having, by such failure aforesaid, and in violation of repeated promises to the said Capt. Walker, and to the secretary to the Agra Bank, between the dates first mentioned, of renewing payments, dishonourably subjected the said Capt. Walker, as the sole surviving security, to a peremptory demand, on March 21, 1850, of Rs. 3,703. 12a., the balance with interest to April 15, 1850, due on the aforesaid bond; for the recovery of which he is left without remedy, in consequence of the said Lieut. W. C. Brackenbury having recently placed his money affairs in the Insolvent Court at Calcutta.

Second Additional Charge.—For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having at Cuttack, up to the present date, July 22, 1850, dishonourably failed to liquidate a debt to the mess of the 41st N.I., amounting to Rs. 44. 4a., being the balance of an account incurred at Gopaulpore during the months of Feb., March, April and May, 1849, and at Berhampore during the months of Aug. and Sept. of the same year, he, Lieut. W. C. Brackenbury, having been repeatedly called upon to remit the amount, thereby causing pecuniary loss to the officers of the said regiment; who, in consideration of his position as an officer, had kindly admitted him as an honorary member of their mess.

Third Additional Charge.—For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having at Berhampore, on Aug. 3, 1849, borrowed from Dass Authravady, mess writer, 41st N.I., the sum of Rs. 10, on the security of Lieut. G. Simpson, 22d N.I., expressly promising to repay the same on the first issue of pay received by him; and having, in violation of such promise, permitted the debt to remain unpaid up to the present date, July 22, 1850; thereby throwing the responsibility of the debt upon the said Lieut. G. Simpson.

Finding.—Not Guilty of the first charge, and the court does therefore fully and honourably acquit him of the same.

Not Guilty of the second charge.

Guilty of the third charge.

Guilty of the first additional charge, with the exception of the latter portion, namely, "for the recovery of which he is left without remedy, in consequence of the said Lieut. W. C. Brackenbury having recently placed his money affairs in the Insolvent Court of Calcutta."

Not Guilty of conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, and of the word "dishonourably," of which it fully and honourably acquits him, but Guilty of the rest of the second additional charge.

Not Guilty of the third additional charge, and the court does therefore fully and honourably acquit him of the same.

Sentence.—To be cashiered.

Approved and confirmed.

(Signed) G. H. F. BERKELEY, Lieut.-General, C. in C.

Although it was right to permit the prisoner considerable latitude in his defence, it was irregular and improper in the court allowing him to take up their time by entering into matter perfectly foreign to the subject before them, which has been the case in one instance in the present trial.

Lieut. W. C. Brackenbury is to be struck off the strength of the army from the date of the publication of this order at Waltair, which is to be reported to the Adjutant-General of the Army.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL, of Jan. the 7th, arrived at Bombay on Feb. the 5th, per Feroze.

SIR C. NAPIER.—When at Kurrachee, on his way to Bombay, the great Belooch Sirdars of Scinde, the men who fought at Meeanee and Hyderabad, waited on Sir Charles Napier to present a sword, valued at 300 guineas.

A SERIOUS ROBBERY was committed at the Oriental Bank on the 8th of February; a sum of Rs. 95,900, in notes of the Bank of Bombay, having been abstracted from the strong box of the schroff, or head cashier.

FRAMJEE COWASJEE. — It is with much regret that we announce the death of a venerable and highly-respected member of the Parsee community, Framjee Cowasjee, who expired on the 12th instant, at Mazagon, in the 87th year of his age. No eulogium is needed on our part to do honour to the deceased. Sufficient are his works to testify to his merits. He was a plain-spoken, honest man; energetic after his own fashion; fair-dealing and sagacious in his mercantile operations. Liberal as well in purse as in opinion, where higher principles than those of mere traffic were concerned. His zeal and constancy in the cause of education were matters of notoriety to all; it was age alone that compelled him to retire from that active co-operation with the Board which had ever so strenuously given. — Telegraph, Feb. 13.

Framjee Cowasjee commenced business as a merchant in 1790; in 1795 he was agent to the East-India Company, and for upwards of half a century, he has been one of the most upright of our merchants, and one of the most zealous and indefatigable promoters of moral and physical improvements. — Bombay Times, Feb. 17.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The Caffre war has commenced, and, according to the Cape Town Mail, "as it will probably be the last, seems likely also to be the most desperate and sanguinary, of all the wars to which those faithless and rapacious savages have provoked their civilized neighbours."

In our last issue we stated that the Governor had left King William's Town for Fort Cox. He there held a great meeting of Gaika chiefs and people on the 19th December. Nearly 3,000 Caffres were present; among them all the principal chiefs, except Sandilli and Anta, who were, however, at no great distance, and received reports of the proceedings. So far as professions went, the replies of Macomo, Stock, Botman, Tola, and the other chiefs, to the demands and warnings of Sir Harry, were fair; but there was a tone of insolence which increased the suspicions previously entertained of their good faith. The Governor insisted that Sandilli and Anta should be given up, and called upon the Caffres to choose a chief to fill the place of Sandilli; and when Sutu, the mother of the deposed chief, was named, the Governor at once accepted the nomination, and appointed the "great widow" of Gaika to the station, which she had once before filled with great discretion.

Information having been received of the place at which Sandilli and his partisans had their rendezvous, it was determined to attempt his capture. At daybreak, on the 24th December, Col. Mackinnon left Fort Cox, and proceeded up the valley of the Keiskamma, with a force of 600 men; but while passing a narrow rocky gorge, three miles from Uniondale, through which his men could only proceed in single file, he was attacked by the Caffres. When the Caffre police, who led the column, and the Cape Mounted Rifles, had passed through the gorge, a deadly fire was opened by Sandilli's Caffres upon the column of infantry. Col. Mackinnon succeeded, with great difficulty, in extricating his troops from the defile, and in dislodging the Caffres; but before this was accomplished, the force had suffered the serious loss of three officers and sixteen men, killed and wounded. Assist. surg. Stuart, of the Cape Mounted Rifles, was killed, and Brigade-major Bisset, of the same corps, severely wounded; Lieut. Catty, of the 6th regiment, was also wounded. Private letters add, that the baggage of the troops, including an ammunition wagon, was lost.

After this disastrous affair, Col. Mackinnon proceeded onwards about three miles towards the mission station at Uniondale, whence he sent off a report to the Governor, and on the following morning commenced his return march by a circuitous route, leading to Fort White, on the Debe River. On reaching the Debe Flats, the troops were horror-struck by the sight of the corpses of fourteen soldiers of the 45th regiment, mangled and stripped by the Caffres. Three of these men, it appears, had been sent out on escort duty, and the other eleven immediately afterwards despatched in search of them.

The attack upon Col. Mackinnon appears to have been the signal for the uprising of all the Gaika tribes. The military villages of Woburn, Auckland, and Johannesburg, on the colonial border, opposite the Gaika territory, were the first attacked. At mid-day, while the inhabitants were seated at their Christmas dinners, the savages surrounded their dwellings, and in a few minutes nothing but smoking ruins, and corpses horribly mutilated, marked the sites where the villages had stood. More than seventy individuals,—including men, women, and children,—perished in these massacres. The Caffres then poured across the boundary in marauding parties, devastating the open country along the frontier, and as far west as Graham's Town. The tribes engaged in these ravages were those of Stock, Botman, and Tola, the very chiefs who had professed peaceful and loyal intentions, a week before, at their meeting with Sir Harry Smith. They attacked the town of Alice, but were repulsed by the Cape Mounted Rifles.

Lieut. Campbell, of the Caffre police, is reported to have been killed. Among those who were murdered at the military villages are mentioned Lieut. Stacey, late of the 45th regiment, and Mr. Phelps.

The Cape Frontier Times, of December 31, contains horrid details of the atrocities committed by the savages in the military villages,—children cut in pieces and hanged on trees; parents murdered in cold blood, after seeing their children despatched; houses burnt along with the inmates.

On the 25th, a sharp affair took place at Fort White. The Caffres, supposing the fort weakened, assembled to the number of 200 near the fort, where, finding themselves confronted by sixteen or seventeen men of the 45th regiment, they seemed irresolute. This was but for a moment; for their leader, throwing his blanket over his head, shook his assegai, and in a few seconds they attacked the military, whose close fire, aided by the civilians of the post (five in number) was too hot for them, and they retreated, fighting desperately, leaving two dead, and bearing off many severely wounded. There being so few soldiers, it was impossible to pursue them.

Meanwhile, the Governor and his small force was hemmed in by the hostile tribes at Fort Cox, and it being supposed that he was in danger, an attempt was made by Major-gen. Somerset to open a communication with Fort Cox. On the 29th December, he left Fort Hare, with a force of 120 men of 91st regiment, 70 Cape Mounted Rifles, and a 3-pounder. A few miles from Fort Hare he was met by an overwhelming body of Caffres, who charged upon the column, broke it, and killed, chiefly in close fighting, two officers (Lieuts. Melvin and Gordon) and twenty men, and wounded one officer (Ensign Bothwick) and twelve men. The private accounts state that the Caffres rushed upon the troops, assagai in hand, like a cloud of locusts. A reinforcement of 100 men from the fort relieved the party, which returned to the fort.

The Governor, it appears, making a dash, with 259 Cape Mounted Rifles, forced his passage through the Debe neck, though opposed by a large body of the enemy, who kept up a heavy fire, but without occasioning any loss to the colonial troops, and reached King William's Town on the 31st. He immediately issued the following proclamation:—

"His Excellency the Governor, accompanied by Col. MacKinnon, reached King William's Town to-day, having forced his passage with a large escort of the Cape corps, through numerous bodies of Caffres, from Fort Cox, via Fort White. It was his intention to have proceeded to Fort Hare, but the enemy were in such force that his means were not adequate to its accomplishment. Every power is delegated to Col. Somerset, during the forced absence of the Governor from the colony, to raise levies, &c., and to name the rallying points of assembly. And his Excellency does most ardently hope that the colonists will rise en masse to aid her Majesty's troops, and the reinforcement of men and guns, which will shortly arrive at East London, to destroy and exterminate these most barbarous and treacherous savages, who for the moment are formidable. Every post in British Caffraria is necessarily maintained. The abandonment of one of them would have been the signal for revolt to every T'Slambie chief. They are well provisioned for six weeks, and form a nucleus for an invading army of patriots. The Gaikas must be driven out of the Amatolas, and expelled for ever! However great the inroad into the colony may have been, it is consoling to his Excellency to know that the maintenance of these posts, which indeed could not have been abandoned, occupies the attention of thousands of Caffres, who would otherwise have gone into the colony. The line of the Buffalo must be maintained, coste qui coste. It involves the safety even of her Majesty's troops, which is paramount."

Despatches had been sent to the Lieut. Governor of Natal to bring down 3,000 Zoolahs on the Gaikas, through the foot of the Quathlamba mountains, which is only twelve days' march.

Information was now received that, besides the Gaika chiefs, Botman, Tola, and Seyolo, the Tambookie chiefs Mapessa and Nyila had joined the confederacy; that Hermanus, who had received a large grant of territory on the Blinkwater, from Governor D'Urban, had likewise risen, and that a Caffre conspiracy, to murder the whites, was detected in the district of Graaff-Reinet. The tribe of Booka had not joined. Umhala had remained quiet, though strongly suspected of hostile intentions. Pato was unequivocally allied to the British cause; his conduct throughout had been marked by a frank decision, which inspired confidence. The Fingoes were faithful, and did good service. The Cape corps (Hottentots) were quite stanch.

On the 31st, the civil commissioner of Albany issued a circular to the several commissioners of the colony, requesting them, in the alarming state of the eastern frontier, to request all burghers and other civil forces to arm themselves, and proceed forthwith to that town.

Graham's Town was crowded with families from the country, and was in a deplorable state.

On the 7th January, Fort Beaufort was attacked, at dawn of day, by a band of Caffres and rebel Hottentots, under Hermanus. A warning of the meditated attack having been received on the previous evening from Major-gen. Somerset, at Fort Hare, the garrison and people were on their guard, and the enemy was repulsed by the troops, Fort Beaufort volunteers, and Fingoes, under Lieut. col. Sutton. Hermanus was killed leading on his men; numbers of Caffres were killed, and the enemy was pursued to Blinkwater, flying in all directions. At Blinkwater, the whole of the spoil accumulated by these miscreants had been secreted, consisting of watches, shawls, brooches, wearing apparel, &c. From 1,500 to 2,000 head of cattle had been taken, besides horses, sheep, and goats. Hermanus made his attack with great valour, but was repulsed with determined bravery.

The conduct of the Fingoes is spoken of with admiration; even the Fingoe women turned out, with knob kirries, to assist the men in finishing the work of destruction upon the enemy, and in driving home the captured cattle.

On the 21st January, an attack was made by the Caffres upon Fort Hare and the town of Alice. The enemy was in great force, but was most gallantly met and defeated by a combined force of troops and Fingoes, aided by the inhabitants. The following is an extract from the official report of Major-gen. Somerset:—

"The enemy attacked my position on the morning of the 21st in great force, having in advance a considerable body of mounted men, and, forming their force into three large columns, and moving rapidly to their left, made a most determined attack on our guards in charge of the cattle. This attack was met by a spirited advance of the Fingoes, and supported by a detachment of the Cape Mounted Rifles, under Lieut. and Adj. Bell. As the columns of the enemy advanced, the guns in the bastions were worked with great effect by the detachment of the Royal Artillery, under Acting-Bombardier Merchant, the fire of which broke their columns, and did considerable execution; the enemy continuing working to their left, evidently receiving considerable reinforcements from parties concealed behind the hills around our position. A very sharp engagement was continued for two hours and a half without intermission. While this was going on, a body of Caffres from the Upper Chumie, and led on by Soga, the principal chief belonging to the mission station in the Chumie, attacked the rear of the cattle in Alice, and succeeded in capturing about 200 head. The brother of this man, whose name was Manana, well known in Graham's Town, was shot in Alice. The Caffres made a most determined attempt to cut off the right body of the cattle collected in Alice, but a well-directed fire from some of the inhabitants, and a body of Fingoes (who were concealed among the cattle), drove the enemy off, who at length, being completely routed at all points, retired with severe loss. Upwards of 100 bodies lay about, and numbers of wounded were carried away during the operations. The enemy got a severe handling. Several chiefs and head men were slain; amongst others, ten deserters from the late police. The action was most severe, and the fire most spirited and determined. I have to regret the loss of six Fingoes killed, and ten wounded severely."

The Governor has by proclamation confiscated the territory of Hermanus, and expelled his people.

The latest advices from the Cape, which are to the 2nd February, state that Sir Harry Smith was still in King William's Town, with about 5,000 troops of all sorts bearing arms, including Hottentot levies and the burgher force. He was waiting until all his levies should have arrived before commencing operations on a great scale against the enemy. Sir Harry has expressed his determination to finish this war in such a way as to render it unlikely that the Caffres will ever again repeat the attempt.

The outbreak is said to have been instigated almost entirely by the native prophet, Umlangeni, who is not in so much esteem with his countrymen as previous to the outbreak. He then possessed great influence over Sandilli, and assured him that the English bullets would melt into water, that the English would be transformed into cattle, the trees become Caffres, and thus the English could be easily and effectually extirpated.

SIAM.

It appears that the Siamese court, having no doubt been apprised by the emissaries it sent to Singapore some time ago to see how its treatment of the late embassy was taken, of the pacific course recommended to be observed by the British Government towards it in future, is daily getting more valiant and demonstrative. The king is said to be making preparations to defend himself, should another embassy be sent. Hundreds of large iron tripods are being fabricated, which are to be placed on the bar, off the mouth of the river, in order to obstruct the entrance of vessels in case of war. The prongs of these tripods are described as being about the size of an elephant's tusk, three resting on the ground, and one erect; so that, in whatever way they are turned, one prong stands up, ready to stake any vessel that may chance to come in contact with it. Some of these instruments are stated to have been already placed on the bar. The commander of one of the king's vessels has been dismissed from the service, because he piloted an English vessel over the bar.—Singapore Free Press.

The Persian moralist, Saadi, says that truth is a very excellent thing when it suits our purpose, but very inconvenient when otherwise.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

Dr. Buist has transmitted to the Asiatic Society of Bengal a paper, "on the general vibration, or descent and upheaval, which seems, at a recent geological period, to have occurred over the northern hemisphere," which is published in the Society's last Journal. The following is an abridgment of the paper:—

The whole of the desert betwixt Cairo and Suez bears the clearest evidence of having, at no distant period, been under the bottom of the sea. After a fall of rain, an efflorescence of salt still appears on its surface. The gravel consists of rolled pebbles, mostly portions of the adjoining rocks. It is everywhere mixed with sea shells. The desert, at the centre station, reaches an elevation of 800 feet, and shells are said to be found at the elevation of 2,000, both on the African and Arabian side.* This most probably has been elevated at a remote period, in comparison with the date of the upheavals along the shores of the Red and other seas, about to be noticed.

All around Suez there is a vast expanse of level plain, extending from two to twenty miles inland, diversified here and there with hillocks of drifted sand, obviously the effect of the wind. A section of the material of which the plain is composed is exhibited along the sea shore. It is about eight feet above high-water mark, and consists entirely of sand, gravel, and shells, perfectly fresh, and apparently of the same varieties as those on the beach. This upheaval extends, with little or no interruption, all the way to Aden, unless where the cliffs advance boldly on the sea. A similar beach, at a similar elevation, is found all around the peninsula of Aden; and though I have had no means of personally determining the fact, I have no doubt it will be found all along the Arabian coast, around the Persian Gulf, and so on to Scinde, and by the shores of Goozerat and Cutch. Of the Delta of the Indus I shall have occasion to speak by-and-by, and so at present pass over Kurrachee. At Gogo, in the Gulf of Cambay, the raised beach is peculiarly conspicuous; the gravels and shells are here cemented into a variety of stone, on which I have bestowed the term "littoral concrete," from its being always found near the shore, and from its resemblance to the artificial building material, called concrete. At Gogo it overlies a large mass of blue clay. With the interruption occasioned by the Delta of the Taptee, the raised beach, mostly consisting of the material just named, extends all along the shore to Bombay, and so on to the southward; and though I cannot speak from experience of the coast further south than 19°, I have great reason to believe it to be continuous, and feel almost certain that the specimens sent to me from Cochín, by General Cullen, belong to it. The upheaval in all these cases varies from six to nine or fifteen feet above high-water mark, rarely attaining the higher elevation. The same thing prevails around a large portion of the shores of Ceylon.

The island of Mauritius is belted by an enormous coral reef throughout its whole shore, excepting about ten miles. Between Savanne and Bois-du-Cap, the sea foams against a barrier of coral from five to fifteen feet in height, and wears it into the most fantastic shapes. At a considerable distance inland, and almost concealed by the trees and shrubs, are two remarkable points or headlands of coral, from twenty to twenty-five feet above the level of the sea. The Observatory of Port Louis is built upon a stratum of coral, ten feet above high-water mark. Blocks of coral, too vast for being transported by any existing agency, are found from 600 to 1,300 feet inland, and which are cut off from the shore by elevated ridges.† The great part of the numberless coral islands which are scattered betwixt the Cape of Good Hope and Ceylon,—the Chagos Archipelago, the Seychelles, Laccadives, and Maldives,—appear to have been elevated to their present level by the same upheaval by which the terraces now under consideration have been produced, of which, I have no doubt, abundance of traces will be found all along the shores of our Eastern Seas. Captain Newbold mentions the abundance of this class of phenomena on the coasts of the Mediterranean, where the shell-gravel, as in India, is being cemented into stone. Beaches hardening into stone prevail along the straits of Messina.‡ Damier speaks of a calcareous deposit in New Holland, consisting of rock, which he thinks must have been formed by the drifting up of sand and shells over a mass of wood, the whole being afterwards consolidated by rain-water; this I have no doubt is an instance of the variety of formation, and a proof of the double movement under review;§ and it seems not improbable that the shell formation of Madeira belongs to the same class of beds, though of this I cannot speak with confidence.* The narrow isthmus, connecting the rock of Gibraltar with the main land, is obviously the result of an upheaval, probably of the same age.

The phenomena around us at Bombay exactly correspond with those of the Carse of Gourie. The whole of our littoral formations consist of the concretes already referred to (beds of peat, with tree roots, and beds of cockle-shells), or of loose sand and shells. From three to ten feet under this (the depth varies) is a bed of blue clay, exactly similar to that with which our estuaries are being silted up. In a great majority of cases, the blue clay is filled with the roots of the mangrove,—a shrub which only grows within high-water mark, avoiding water of more than four or five feet deep. The fangs and fibres of the roots are perfectly entire,—some of the thickest of them, indeed, are but imperfectly decayed,—most of them are converted into a substance like peat; and, when dried, break with a conchoidal fracture and semi-resinous lustre, something between jet and lignite. These roots and this arrangement is found to prevail all around the island of Bombay, on many parts of the island of Salsette, on the shores of the gulf of Cambay, and at Kurrachee, in Scinde. This state of things is not peculiar to creeks, bays, or estuaries, and can in no way be accounted for by the ponding back of water; it prevails all around the shores of our islands and estuaries into the interior, as far as the gravel or concrete beds themselves, and is visible on those portions of our shores exposed to the full force of the ocean. It seems very probable that the New Holland trees described by Mr. Damier, and the Madeira wood mentioned by Dr. Macaulay, may belong to the same class as the roots I have described, though I have not felt warranted in adducing them as proofs of the hypothesis.

I am satisfied that to this variety of objects the lignite, found near Cochín, in lat. 8°, belongs; and that, were our shores examined, it would be found at intervals everywhere along them. In Scotland, at Perth, in the Carse of Gourie,† in the carses of Falkirk and Sterling, under the present city of Glasgow, and along the banks of the Clyde, boats and canoes have been dug out from under ten to twenty feet of alluvium, and still ten or twenty feet above the level of high water. Mr. Chambers infers from these things, and I think most conclusively, that the habitation of our island took place before the last thirty or forty feet of its elevation was gained from the ocean. May we not go further than this: from the relations of these relics of human art to the peat beds and submerged forests around, is it not probable that the depression under review was in progress within the human period?

The absence of roots in situ is no proof of a depression never having occurred. At the present moment, for every 50 yards we have mangroves, we have at least 1,000 where there are none; and on abrupt, sandy, or rocky shores, wherever, indeed, the locality is unfavourable for the collection of mud and the growth of vegetables, we can have no direct proof of depression.

If, as I have shown, we have the old sea margin of nearly uniform character, aspect, and elevation, presenting itself everywhere, it is not, surely, too great a stretch of inference to conclude that the depression was, like the upheaval, not local, but general, and that they everywhere accompanied each other.

This theory of double movement completely solves all the mysteries attendant on the formation of coral reefs: the general descent permitted beds of coral of very great thickness to be formed, the ascent brought the whole again to the surface, or above it.

A Mahratta account of Gova Bander, or Goa, found amongst the Mackenzie MSS., analyzed by the Rev. W. Taylor, states that the country was ruled by the Cadamba rajah when foreigners came in ships thither, and landing, sought an interview with the rajah, to whom they represented that they came from Partegi (Portugal), and were desirous of being allowed to trade, making presents, and exhibiting specimens of merchandize, which pleased the rajah. They requested a gift of as much land as would be covered by a cow's hide, and receiving the gift with permission to trade, they made the cow's hide cover a coss of land, built houses upon it, and a fort, which they called Murgam, mounted it with cannon, and garrisoned it with troops. These things being reported to the rajah, he went down to inspect their proceedings, and seeing the biscot (biscuit) they ate, and the strong liquors they drank, he told his people that he perceived them to be racshaas; nevertheless, having given them his promise, he would not violate it. The strangers proceeded to declare themselves lords of the soil, and insisted upon the

The caves of Ungley, upon the river Kistnah (in Southern India), consist of three excavations, one over the other; the roof is supported by pillars of the form usual in Hindu temples. Around the walls are different reliefs, very much mouldered. The upper story contains a colossal figure, twenty-five feet in length, lying on stones, in a recumbent position; around it, on the wall, in relief, are figures of deities, and two colossal figures, which appear to protect his slumbers. The whole is excavated out of the gneiss rock, which is very fast decomposing, the decomposition taking place principally in the centre of the pillars. The lower excavation leads, it is said, to Mungalhery, about three coss distant.—Dr. Foysey's Private Journal.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON.

SATURDAY, March 22, 1851.

THE Caffre war has happened inopportunistically for the Cape colonists at the present juncture, when they are stickling for the absolute control over their revenues, and the administration of their expenditure. "Give us," say they, "the management of our own affairs, and we will not ask the mother-country for pecuniary assistance;" and there are public men and public writers here who are determined to hold them to this bargain. Some of the colonial advocates are, indeed, seeking a loop-hole out of which to escape the engagement; British Caffraria, they tell us, is not a colonial, but an imperial possession, and the imperial treasury must pay for its defence. The Ministers, however,—so far as we can trust men who waver and fluctuate with every political breeze, abandoning or mutilating their own measures at every manifestation of resistance,—seem resolved to view the obligation differently.

Whichever party shall be ultimately saddled with the bill, the cost of punishing the Caffres must be incurred. The treacherous proceedings of these tribes, and the wanton atrocities perpetrated by them, tend to justify those repulsive draughts of their character, which have been hitherto set down as hideous caricatures and exaggerations. Their present outbreak does not appear to have been the result of any immediate provocation. "The present war," we quote the Cape Frontier Times, "is not a cattle war; it has evidently been the result of a long-considered and extensive conspiracy between the Caffres in Caffraria, and their countrymen and various coloured classes in the colony,—and its object is to exterminate the white man." At the meeting between Sir Harry Smith and the Gaika chiefs at Fort Cox, on the 19th December, the latter alleged no grievance, and professed an earnest desire for peace and amity. "Look at your herds now," said the Governor, "and what they were three years ago, when you were starved and naked. Your beautiful fields are now all covered with cattle; you put your flocks and herds into your kraals at night, and sleep securely, and find them all there in the morning." This was assented to; the chief Stock thanked the Governor, their father, and chose "the stick of peace." Botman thanked the "Great Chief," and did not wish for war. Xoxo says, "We are your children; we wish for peace; we have no desire for war; we have come to testify to you that we want peace." Yet, in about a week, these identical chiefs were burning the military villages, barbarously mangling and murdering their inhabitants,—men, women, and children,—ravaging the open country along the frontier, committing the most horrible cruelties upon the unoffending and unresisting people, as if they were, what the colonists have heretofore termed them, tigers in human shape.

The repulse and retreat of the small force which advanced from Fort Hare, under Colonel Somerset, to open a communication with the Governor, who was hemmed in at Fort Cox, are to be lamented, not merely on account of the severe loss which attended them, but of the confidence which this advantage must have infused into the savages. The defeat,—for such it must be termed,—is not very satisfactorily accounted for. According to the official report, the force consisted of 120 men of the 91st Foot, under Lieut. Colonel Yarborough, and 70 Cape Mounted Rifles, under Major Somerset, accompanied by a small 3-pounder gun, Royal Artillery. About six miles from Fort Hare, they were attacked by the enemy in considerable force as they were advancing up a hill; but the Caffres were driven back, and the troops established themselves for a time in position. The despatch of Colonel Somerset proceeds:—

"From the large body of the enemy whom I observed collecting, I saw at once that I could not effect the object I had in view; I therefore directed the troops to retire towards Fort Hare. At this time, a very large force of the enemy was also observed coming over from the mountains of the Amatola, and others assembled in the Chumie Hoek. The troops continued retiring in admirable order, contesting every foot of ground with the enemy, whose numbers increased out of every valley, as we passed the successive heads of the various kloofs. The day was most oppressive. I was able to open the gun upon the enemy several times with good effect. After retiring about three miles, while holding a small valley on a hill, in firing a shot from the small gun, the trail unfortunately broke short off, which rendered the gun completely unserviceable. I had it brought on, until, when passing a valley with rugged banks, the gun fell over, and could be no longer got forward; at the time, we were attacked by a very superior force in a thorny valley, the troops having a hand-to-hand encounter with the enemy. Here, I am sorry to say, several of our brave soldiers fell, including Lieut. Melvin and Lieut. and Adj. Gordon, 91st regt.; Ensign Bothwick, 91st, was wounded; also several men, 91st and C.M. Riflemen, were wounded, and several troop horses; also Major Somerset's charger was wounded. Having forced themselves from this difficulty, the troops continued to retire in perfect order, when they were met by 100 men, most judiciously sent out in support by Major Forbes, 91st, whom I had left in command at Fort Hare."

Happily, the enemy, in their subsequent attacks upon Fort Beaufort and Fort Hare, though they were made with great audacity and impetuosity, were taught severe lessons, and as the Governor, at the date of the latest advices, had collected a force of 5,000 men at King William's Town, which was continually augmenting by the arrival of fresh levies, we may be permitted to hope that the war will not be of long duration. The energy and military talents of Sir H. Smith justify our confidence in his declaration, that he will finish the contest in such a manner as will indispose the Caffre tribes speedily to renew it.

The conduct of the Fingoes stands out in honourable contrast to that of other native tribes. It appears that they have been not merely stanch in their fidelity to the British, but no despicable auxiliaries. The courage of the Fingoes, in the two successful conflicts with the Caffres at Fort Beaufort and Fort Hare, is highly commended, and seems to have had no small share in producing the result.

THE Reports of the Commissioners appointed to inquire, in Ceylon, into the authenticity of certain proclamations alleged to have been issued by Captain Alfred Watson, of the Ceylon Rifle Regiment, during the insurrection in that island, leave little room for doubt that the documents, which that officer repudiated before the Select Committee of the House of Commons, declaring that his name had been forged thereto, are genuine. As we were amongst those who gave implicit credit to the deliberate assertion of Captain Watson, that he not only did not sign, issue, or authorize the specific proclamation produced by Mr. Baillie, but that he never issued any Cingalese proclamation whatever, it is with no little regret, as well as astonishment, that we have read the irrefragable proofs adduced by the Commissioners to the contrary.

It appears to be established beyond any reasonable doubt, that four proclamations, of which Captain Watson disclaimed all knowledge, and to which he said his signature had been forged, were prepared (with others in every respect similar to them) in his office, and issued under his orders, after being signed by him. Copies of other proclamations, of a different tenor, and orders directing the sequestration of property, were produced to the Commissioners, all bearing Captain Watson's signature, clearly showing, they say, "that Captain Watson, whilst at Matelle, in 1848, was in the habit of signing and issuing Cingalese orders and proclamations." The probability of his having issued the proclamations in question, they add, is further established by another proclamation, the draught of which was produced, corrected by Captain Watson himself. The Commissioners admit the possibility that the English draught may have been imperfectly rendered into Cingalese, and they concede the further possibility that Captain Watson may have signed the proclamations in ignorance of their full import; but his denial, they observe, "extends to a positive declaration that he never did issue a Cingalese proclamation of any kind."

The witnesses, sixty in number, examined by the Commissioners, appear to include all descriptions of persons who could have been privy to the issue of such proclamations, assuming them to have been issued,—the office servants who actually wrote them, the head-men to whom they were issued and by whom they were carried into effect, besides British military officers, and others. The witnesses employed as Captain Watson's office servants speak distinctly to their previous knowledge of the proclamations in question, and give in detail an account of the part they took in their preparation. The evidence of the head-men directly shows that these proclamations were issued from Captain Watson's office, and in many instances were delivered to them in his presence. With one or two exceptions, these head-men continue to hold office, and some of them are indebted to Captain Watson for their appointments. In short, as the Commissioners state, the direct evidence in support of the genuineness of the documents is complete, and strongly corroborated by the probabilities of the case.

As Captain Watson, it is understood, in the face of these Reports, still maintains his former assertions, and as he is about to undergo a trial by Court-martial, it is but fair to afford him every opportunity to vindicate his innocence before a verdict is pronounced upon this extraordinary case.

Meanwhile, the Ceylon insurrection affair, with which this transaction is connected, threatens to augment the perplexities of the Ministry. Mr. Baillie had given notice of a motion in the House of Commons, on the 25th, for a Resolution, with reference to the manner in which the disturbances in the colony were dealt with, to the following effect:—

"That the conduct of Earl Grey, in signifying her Majesty's unqualified approbation of Lord Torrington's administration of Ceylon, has been precipitate and injudicious, tending to establish precedents of rigour and severity in the government of her Majesty's foreign possessions, and injurious to the character of this country for justice and humanity."

This Resolution having been regarded by the First Minister of the Crown as a vote of censure, which would delay important public business, and the affirmance of which would break up the administration, Mr. Baillie withdrew his notice, but the motion still impends.

It is proper to add that, on the 18th inst., Lord Torrington, in his place in the House of Lords, complained of the unfair course of proceeding which had been adopted towards him, and gave notice that, on the 1st April, he should vindicate himself in that House from the charges made against him, and prove that he had done his duty to his Sovereign and the country.

PROCLAMATIONS OF CAPTAIN WATSON IN CEYLON.

The Commissioners appointed by the Governor of Ceylon to inquire into the circumstances relating to certain documents presented to a Committee of the Commons' House of Parliament, on the 14th of February, 1850, with the name of Captain Watson attached thereto, have, in accordance with their instructions, reported to Lord Grey the result of their inquiry.

Their first report, which is dated "Candy, June 10, 1850," begins by stating the reasons why they could not then transmit the full report on the facts elicited, together with the evidence and documents; but they communicate to his Lordship their opinion on the facts which they deem have been elicited:—

"The four proclamations enclosed in your Lordship's letter of the 24th February, 1850, were forwarded to us by the acting Colonial Secretary of Ceylon. They are, therefore, the documents Capt. Watson before the Select Committee denied all knowledge of, and to which he alleged his signature had been forged, and are the same, the authenticity or otherwise of which it was the desire of the Ceylon Committee should be ascertained.

"That the documents in question, with others in every respect similar to them, delivered to us during our inquiry, were prepared in Capt. Watson's office in Matelle, in 1848, and issued under Capt. Watson's orders, after having been signed by him, appears to us to admit of no reasonable doubt. The witnesses to the preparation in Capt. Watson's office of the proclamations are the servants who were employed in writing them. Two of them have expressly stated that the proclamations produced before the Ceylon Committee are in their handwriting. A memorandum or office copy made at the time by two of the witnesses of these very proclamations, as well as of other orders issued by Capt. Watson, has been produced and satisfactorily accounted for.

"The number of office servants employed by Capt. Watson at that time was seven, all of whom, with the exception of two, Don Gabriel and Mr. Mackelwie, have deposed to their knowledge of the preparation of the proclamations in Capt. Watson's office. Mr. Mackelwie does not appear to have been much at Capt. Watson's office, his duties of supervisor requiring his attendance in the villages at a distance from Matelle. Don Gabriel states that he recollects proclamations having been issued by Capt. Watson in regard to the property of the four individuals mentioned in the proclamations in question, but states that they contained no threat of putting parties to death.

"The evidence that the proclamations were in actual circulation, and acted upon, is very voluminous. It is chiefly given by the various head-men to whom they were issued, and by whom the orders they contained were carried out.

"We would only add, on this point, that we have not thought it necessary to take evidence to the handwriting of Capt. Watson's signature, as this can only amount to an expression of opinion; and having ourselves perused, with much attention, about 200 signatures of Capt. Watson, appended to letters, official reports, and other papers, we see no reason to doubt the authenticity of those which appear on the proclamations before us.

"Besides our inquiry into the circumstance of the issue by Capt. Watson of the said proclamations, we may further state, for your Lordship's information, that to enable us to ascertain the nature of the documents issued by Capt. Watson, with reference to his answers before the Select Committee, and to the letter addressed by him to your Lordship, dated the 24th of March, 1850, we required all persons holding appointments issued to them by Capt. Watson, or having in their possession other papers signed by him, to produce them before us, and the result has been that we have had delivered to us a great many papers, sixteen being appointments of head-men under Capt. Watson's signature, seven of which alone bear an English translation on them.

"The other papers generally consist of orders to head-men, directing the sequestration of property, or in furtherance of that object. Two copies of a proclamation of a different tenor to those under inquiry are also amongst them. The papers thus delivered to us bear Capt. Watson's signature, and clearly show that Capt. Watson, whilst at Matelle in 1848, was in the habit of signing and issuing Cingalese orders and proclamations. Indeed, we cannot refrain from here expressing our opinion that, had Capt. Watson been present during the inquiry, the whole subject would have been so forcibly recalled to his memory that the lengthened investigation we have been forced into would have been rendered unnecessary.

"We have, &c.,

"W. MOREHEAD,

"J. RHODES.

In their full report, dated "Colombo, June 20," accompanied by the evidence, they comment at great length upon the evidence, and conclude thus:—

"Having thus stated to your Lordship the grounds on which we have founded our opinion as to the genuineness of the documents submitted to us for investigation, we would merely add that the direct evidence given is, in our opinion, accurate and complete, and strongly corroborated by the probabilities of the case; unless, therefore, perjury be imputed to the numerous witnesses examined, but for the commission of which on the part of any one of them we have been unable to discover that any sufficient object existed, we are satisfied that no other conclusion than that we have recorded could by any possibility have been arrived at."

EAST-INDIA HOUSE.

A Quarterly General Court of the East-India Company was held at their house, in Leadenhall Street, on Wednesday, the 19th inst.; John Shepherd, Esq., in the chair.

The minutes of the proceedings of the last General Court were read and confirmed.

The names of accounts and papers which had been presented to Parliament this session, and since laid before the Court of Proprietors, were then read.

The Chairman said that, in pursuance of the by-laws, he had to lay before the Court a copy of a private Bill, which had been read a first time in the House of Commons, by which Bill it was proposed to enact that the East-India Company should pay to J. S. Buckingham the sum of 10,000*l.*, as compensation for the loss of property sustained by him in consequence of certain acts of the Government of Bengal.

The secretary having read the title of the bill,

The Chairman said,—All I have to observe in reference to this Bill is, that the Court of Directors have given their attention to the progress of the Bill, and will continue to do so in the most vigilant manner.

REVENUES AND DISBURSEMENTS OF THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY.

Colonel Dickenson, having given notice of the following motions,—

1. That collectorate abstracts of the undermentioned items and statement, No. 7 of the Parliamentary Accounts for the year ending 1848, of the annual territorial revenues and disbursements of the Bombay presidency, indicating such portions thereof as will and may lapse to the East-India Company, explanatory also of their last year's increase, collectively amounting to Rs. 33,37,971, be laid before the Court of Proprietors:—

"Allowances and assignments, payable out of the revenues, in accordance with treaties or other engagements, including those of the ex-Paishwa and his minister, Rs. 16,31,561.

"Allowances to village officers and jenamdars. Rs. 93,31,642."

2. That a statement of the undermentioned item, contained in the same account, indicating such portions thereof as are of a general more than a local charge, be also laid before the Court of Proprietors, viz.—

"Charges of civil and political establishments, including contingent charges, Rs. 36,83,368."

The hon. proprietor then proceeded to explain his views, as follows:—My principal object in view by the two first motions submitted for your consideration is, to unravel, if possible, some of the intricacies of the accounts to which they refer, and to offer such explanation as will, I have reason to hope, satisfy this Court that the time has arrived for relieving the Bombay Government from, I will not say the odium, but from that incubus under which it has, unlike every other portion of our Eastern empire amenable for its expenditure to the Government of India, so long laboured, in consequence of an expenditure greatly exceeding its revenue; it appearing by this document that the average of such deficit was, during the first three years of the present Charter, £311,000, and for the last three years to which these, the last published, accounts are made up, £611,000. Now, gentlemen, if this increasing deficit could be viewed as a mere matter of accounts, involving nothing practically injurious to the advancement of Bombay, I should be unwilling to occupy your time by treating such paper transaction as a matter of importance, or if it were traceable, through the series of accounts into which I have carefully looked, to any systematic outlay for the benevolent and enlightened object of local amelioration, so far from lamenting it, I should be alike indisposed to regard it as any ill omen of the future; but when it is in a great measure occasioned by debiting this presidency with certain overwhelming expenditures which should, in fairness, be made chargeable against the general treasury; and when the existence of such deficits is oftentimes made the pretext for delaying those improvements of our internal communications, for which all classes of our native subjects, especially those engaged in agricultural and commercial pursuits, have again and again imploringly asked; taking into consideration, also, that the effects of such a never-failing deficit are to blight the hopes and damp the energies of every employé, from the revenue commissioner down to the lowest district officer, and to cripple the means of the local Government in a degree not less hurtful to its dignity than it is incompatible with the well-being and just claims of its nine million subjects. When, gentlemen, such are the local evils resulting from the mode in which these accounts are made up, I do hope it will engage your consideration in what manner they can be modified, so as to clear up that obscurity in which so many of the principal items are involved, in view to such ulterior measures as may appear advisable for rendering the resources of the Bombay presidency more equal to the fair and legitimate demands upon it, without that extraneous aid which can never be resorted to without humiliation to the character, and manifest disadvantage to the subjects, of the weaker Government. In elucidation of the main point which I deem it of so much importance to establish, viz. that the Bombay presidency has been unfairly saddled with a debit of £3,800,000, but for which it would long ere this have yielded a surplus revenue, I beg to draw the attention of this Court to the facts revealed by these accounts, viz. that in the year 1838, when India was in a perfect state of tranquillity, the military expenditure of Madras amounted to £2,960,000, and that of Bombay to £1,178,000. I have next to observe that these two presidencies remained for the ten years which followed in the same state of internal tranquillity; at the expiration of which, the military expenditure of Madras had undergone a progressive decrease, amounting to a million and a half. During the same period of tranquillity within the Bombay presidency, its military expenditure had, for operations beyond the frontier, been increased by £3,800,000. Now, as it also appears from these accounts that there had been a progressive increase of the net revenue of Bombay for the ten years under review, amounting to £4,500,000, it follows that the less amount of deficit for the same period would have been absorbed by such accession of revenue, besides leaving a considerable surplus towards the amelioration of some of our more productive, but, I lament to add, to this day utterly neglected districts. Another most unfair charge against the revenue of the Bombay presidency is that of the India Navy, amounting, on an average of the last three years, to which these accounts are made up, to £168,000, being £42,000 in excess of what it was during a like period at the commencement of the present Charter. Required as this arm of our national defence is, more for general than local purposes, a pro rata reduction should, at any rate, be made in the charges under this head against Bombay. I shall take up the time of this Court with only one more observation, to show how desirable it is that greater consideration should be shown towards the public in the preparation of these accounts, in which, though separate statements are contained of the revenues and expenditures on account of Penang, Singapore, and Malacca, which are in such an improved condition as to pay their own expenses, no allusion is to be found to Aden, which has been a British possession for more than eleven years; with the enormous sums expended on which, as well for our political establishments at Busbire, in Turkish Arabia, and at Zanzibar, it seems in like manner unreasonable that the most impoverished treasury should any longer be made chargeable. One word before sitting down, as regards Scinde, the deficits on which account, up to the period of its being made over to the Bombay presidency, as appears by these accounts, amounted to £14,833,388; but as the next year's computed deficit is reduced to £162,435, and the estimated receipts exceed what has ever yet been realized, it may be reasonably hoped that such acquisition will not long prove burthensome to the finances of Bombay, more especially under the able administration of the gentleman upon whom its charge has recently devolved.—The gallant member concluded by moving the resolutions.

Mr. Sullivan considered that a more lucid and comprehensive view of the total amount of the revenues derived from each presidency was particularly necessary, in order that the proprietors might see whether those revenues were increasing from legitimate sources; whether it was in consequence of the increased prosperity of the people, or in consequence of the confiscation of the property belonging to the native princes.

The Chairman said that, with reference to the motion itself, he entertained no particular objection to it; but it appeared to him, from the general scope of his gallant friend's remarks, the particular abstracts required by him were a mere secondary object, and that his real purpose was to endeavour, if possible, to establish a different system of furnishing the accounts, in order to show more distinctly what charges were defrayed by the Bombay presidency, and what by the other presidencies. It appeared obvious that, although, for instance, the Indian Navy was kept up at a particular presidency, yet it was a charge for the general purposes of the whole of India; and no one could suppose that it was an item of disbursement peculiar to that presidency where the navy happened to be stationed. It did seem to him that it would be an improved system, if they were to adopt the plan recommended by the gallant colonel. He thought it much better to continue the accounts in the form at present observed. If there were no errors in the figures, he thought hon. gentlemen ought to be satisfied. With regard to the particular items of which an abstract was required, was it the wish of the gallant proprietor to have the names of all the parties to whom the allowances were made? If so, he would find those particulars under the head of advances, in accordance with treaties or other engagements particularly adverted to, explained previous to 1847-48, when those advances to the pagodas, mosques, &c., were set forth in detail. Since then, they had been accounted for in the aggregate. He certainly objected to the system of having the estimates divided among the three presidencies, as sought for by his gallant friend. But after all, it should not be forgotten that the form of the accounts was imperative upon the East-India Company, for when the House of Commons wished to have returns, they dictated their own form. Although he was satisfied that no improvement could be made in the present system, yet he had no objection to furnish the abstracts required.

Col. Sykes said that, for some years past, he was perfectly satisfied there was no part of the administration of the affairs of British India that would bear a more thorough sifting than the administration of its finances. He felt confident that the resources of the country would, before long, be largely increased, and he was satisfied that there was no occasion for these returns. The Finance Committee would apply their talents to the subject this year, and he hoped that the time was rapidly coming when there would be a considerable disposable balance for the promotion of public works, such as the formation of roads and canals, the erection of bridges, and other public and agricultural purposes.

The motion was then agreed to.

PUBLICITY OF NOTICES OF MOTION.

Col. Dickenson said that, in moving the third resolution, of which he had given notice, he thought the reasonableness of it, and its very great convenience to the proprietors, would be readily admitted. He should not, therefore, occupy the time of the Court by any observation, but at once move—

That publicity be given in the customary newspapers of all notices of motion submitted by any member of this Court in the week following that in which they are presented, as well as on the third day previous to the meeting of the next Quarterly Court of Proprietors, for the consideration and disposal of all such motions.

Mr. Lewin seconded the motion.

The Chairman.—All I can say in reply to my hon. friend who has made this motion is, that we have followed the course which has given satisfaction for the last century. You have the reports of the public press, which is always ready to mention any notice of your intended proceedings which at all possess any public interest. Besides this, your notices are published for three days consecutively before the day of meeting in eleven morning papers, making no less than thirty-three publications; the cost of which, I believe, is not less than 140*l*. I think, therefore, that there is no necessity for this motion, more especially as it would add greatly to the expense; and I doubt whether it would be of much benefit to any person.

Mr. Weeding saw no use in having the notices published so long before the Court met. In former times, the notices were read by the secretary, when delivered in.

Col. Dickenson said, his only object was to substitute ten days for three days' publicity.

The Chairman.—We must alter the by-law before that can be done.

The motion was then withdrawn.

THE CASE OF OLD VENCATAROGLOO NAIDOO.

Mr. Lewin moved for the production of papers relative to the removal of a native translator from a Government office in Madras, against whom charges were alleged that he had abstracted documents from the office, and had communicated their contents to the editor of a newspaper in that presidency. It was contended by this person that the Government had no right to remove him from his office; but if they had, it was very clear that in so removing him they were not entitled in the official document to pass a censure upon his conduct, more especially as the allegations on which his removal took place were totally denied. But notwithstanding this denial, all inquiry, which had frequently been demanded, had been systematically refused; and all that the aggrieved party now asked for was, that an inquiry should be instituted; and for this purpose a production of the papers he (Mr. Lewin) now moved for was absolutely necessary to the ends of justice. The hon. proprietor having entered into the details of the case, the whole of which have already more than once been fully reported, concluded with making his motion.

Mr. Sullivan seconded the motion, though in doing so he must express his disbelief that this party had been sentenced to dismissal without inquiry.

The Chairman said, this question had been brought forward on two previous occasions; first on the 20th March, 1849, and again on the 15th March, 1850; and on both occasions the Court thought fit to refuse the production of the papers. And yet, after this, the hon. proprietor now for the third time called upon the Court to grant him the papers. He hoped the Court would not agree to the motion.

The question was put and negatived.

THE DESCENDENTS OF THE LATE RAJAH OF SATTARA.

Mr. Sullivan said, he was about to make an appeal to the sympathy and justice of the Court on behalf of the descendants of the late Rajah of Sattara, who for want of justice had been reduced to a state of absolute starvation. He wished to ask the East India Company to restore that which they had no more right to retain than his (Mr. Sullivan's) own property. As a preliminary to what he had to say, he begged leave to observe, that with the native princes of India it was not usual in practice to make any distinction between their public and private property; but in the year 1818 a distinction was made between the private and public property of the Rajah of Sattara, and a large sum of money was set aside for the private expenses of the Rajah, which was kept in a separate treasury. This arrangement was made by Capt. Grant, under instructions from Mr. Elphinstone, dated the 8th of April, 1818. In a despatch from Capt. Grant, dated 23rd March, 1819, he stated that he had proposed to allow Ra. 25,000 a month for the Rajah's private expenses. This allowance was continued for a long period of time, and it appeared that in the course of twenty years Pertaub Singh accumulated out of the savings of his private property a sum to the extent of 25 or 26 lacs of rupees. When, in Sept. 1849, the Government of Bombay determined to undo the Rajah of Sattara, the Governor (Sir James Carnac) told him that upon his peaceable submission to the British Government, a liberal allowance should be made to him and his family, and that all his private property should be restored to him. Here then was an admission that the Rajah was possessed of private property. The Rajah did make a peaceable submission to the British Government, but his private property was not restored to him. What were the reasons assigned for this breach of a solemn engagement? First, it was said that the Rajah had no private property, but that all his property was the property of the state. This view was taken by the Court of Directors; but it was in complete contradiction to the declaration made by Sir James Carnac; it was, moreover, in the face of the opinion of that individual, who had the strongest motives for proving that there was no private property, because all the public property of the Rajah would have devolved upon him as the successor of the Rajah. But that successors had admitted the validity of the claims of the ex-Rajah to several lacs of rupees as his private property. It was true that Sir James Carnac had since declared that the Rajah had no private property, and that his opinion was that the claim was inadmissible. Was this extraordinary revolution in the opinion of Sir J. Carnac produced by any new facts? The same facts were before him on the 30th August, 1839, when he declared that the Rajah had private property, as were before him on the 21st November, 1839, when he as positively declared that he had not. The promise of Sir J. Carnac of the 30th of August was unqualified and made on his own responsibility, but in November he found himself called upon to submit to a superior authority, viz. the Governor-General in Council. But what were the data which the Governor-General in Council had in which to form a correct judgment? Did Sir J. Carnac inform the Council that he had pledged the Indian Government that the private property should be restored to the Rajah? The Council declared its opinion that the whole of the property should be confiscated. That was their dictum, and the Governor-General acquiesced in that absolute opinion. Finally the private property of the Rajah was, in violation of all the pledges that had been given to him, made over to his brother. But the Court of Directors had, upon a subsequent occasion, completely annulled their own decision, for when the discussion took place with respect to the annexation of Sattara, it was universally admitted that the adoption of a son was perfectly valid as far as it affected Appa Saib's private property. This was a recognition of the fact that Appa Saib had private property. When the promise was made by Sir James Carnac in August, 1839, he was under some apprehension of meeting with opposition at Sattara, and then he recognized the private property of the Rajah; but when in November the Rajah had peaceably submitted himself, then it was held that the Rajah had no property but what was the property of the state. With all deference, therefore, the Court had cut the ground from under them. One reason assigned for taking this property was, that the Bombay Government had made an allowance to the Rajah in lieu of all his claims to private property.

The Chairman.—Hear! hear!

Mr. Sullivan was glad to hear the ground on which the hon. chairman had put his case. It was a great admission. But by the documents he held in his hand, the Bombay Government had not only pledged itself to restore the private property of the ex-Rajah, but also to make him an allowance for the support of himself and family in respectability and comfort. These were two distinct obligations. First, he would ask was allowance made to the Rajah sufficient to maintain him and his family in respectability? Colonel Carpenter, a person well acquainted with the Rajah's affairs, bears testimony that the Rajah, deprived of his private property, was reduced to a state of poverty and degradation, and that he was very considerably in debt, without any means of making arrangements with his creditors. But we had been brought up in a school where we were taught that when two parties entered into an agreement, it could not be avoided without the consent of both. Was there the slightest evidence that the Rajah consented to yield to this bargain? But another reason had been assigned why justice should not be done to the family of the late Rajah; namely, that he had died rich. But that could not in the slightest degree discharge the British Government from its obligation to restore the private property of the Rajah. But he contended, from the testimony of Colonel Carpenter, that the Rajah could not have died rich. All the reasons, therefore, which had been assigned for not fulfilling the engagement with the Rajah were perfectly insufficient. The hon. proprietor next adverted to the allowance which was made to the Ranees and her daughter, and contended that it was wholly inadequate to support them in respectability. It had been made a charge against this woman that her young son called himself Rajah. What other name could he possibly call himself by? He was Rajah by inheritance. He had but one name, and by that name he was known. This was a totally novel proceeding on the part of the British Government. On no former occasion had they called upon a native prince to renounce his hereditary title. In conclusion, he observed, that all that had been done in fulfilment of the solemn engagement with the Rajah and his family was to allow them in the whole 3,600*l.* How, then, stood the account? The revenue of Sattara amounted to 140,000*l.* a year; and the interest on the Rajah's private property was 10,000*l.*; making altogether 150,000*l.*: and out of this an allowance was given of a sum of 1,200*l.*, and another sum of 2,400*l.*, being 3,600*l.*, thus leaving a balance of 146,400*l.* in favour of the British Government. He had shown, beyond any power of question, that Sir James Carnac came under a positive engagement, first, to make an allowance for the respectable provision of the Rajah and his family, and, secondly, to restore his private property to the Rajah, and that neither of these engagements had been fulfilled. The hon. gentleman concluded by moving, that the Court of Directors be requested to take such steps as they may consider necessary for restoring to the family of the deceased Rajah of Sattara what was admitted to be his private property when he was deposed, in redemption of the pledge given to the late Rajah, on the 28th September, 1839, by the then Governor of Bombay, Sir James Carnac, on behalf of the East India Company; and that the Court of Directors be further requested to take such steps as may be necessary for the restoration to the family of Appa Saib the private property of which Pertaub Saib died possessed, the validity of the adoption of Appa Saib as his son by the late Rajah having been formally recognized in respect to such private property.

Mr. Lewin felt great pleasure in seconding the motion, as he was perfectly satisfied it was made with a view to do justice.

THE CHAIRMAN said it was not his intention to follow Mr. Sullivan into the details which he had given to the Court, because he was in great hopes that before he sat down he should be able to convince him, as well as other hon. proprietors who take a favourable view of the case, that it was both undesirable and quite unnecessary to reargue this question. With regard to the alleged private property of the late Rajah, Mr. Sullivan had gone over the ground that had, on former occasions, been travelled with respect to Sir James Carnac's promise that that property should be restored. No doubt Sir J. Carnac did make that promise. But Mr. Sullivan knew well that when at a subsequent period Sir James Carnac came to consider the question with his council, it was considered impracticable to adopt the plan that he individually had proposed. It was considered better to fix the annual allowance to the ex-Rajah in lieu of the claim which had been raised, because there existed a difficulty in discriminating between public and private property in the native states of India. It was accordingly determined to allow him Rs. 10,000 a month, particularly in reference to his claim. He did not agree with the hon. proprietor, considering the situation in which the unfortunate Rajah had placed himself, that that was an inadequate allowance. He admitted that a different system was adopted, after the determination was come to that the district of Sattara should be resumed by the East-India Company. Had that district been still kept up as an independent state, policy would have dictated that the letter of the law should be adhered to; but when it was decided to annex Sattara to the British possessions, a more liberal course was thought desirable. Therefore, if there had been any inconsistency on the part of the Government, it was to be attributed to the liberality of the British authorities. He begged to inform the hon. proprietor that the Court of Directors had determined, with a view to set at rest the money claims that still existed, to raise the allowance to the Ranees from Rs. 800 rupees to Rs. 2,500 a month, being Rs. 30,000 a year, independent of an allowance to her little boy. He thought that was not a very illiberal allowance; moreover, they had determined to pay off the arrears due at the time of her husband's death, which would amount to 10,000*l.* He was happy to inform the Court that the Ranees had expressed her satisfaction at the arrangement. She had thrown herself completely on the Governor-General, and had written a letter in her own hand to say that she had sent to recall her agent from this country. Was it just, was it decent, then, that gentlemen should attempt to renew these claims, and keep up angry feelings between these natives and the government of Bombay? For his own part, he thought it most fortunate that the Ranees had made up her mind to follow the counsels of prudent men, instead of those parties (he meant to make no particular allusion) who wished to keep up an agitation which could only have the result he had stated. The opinion of the Court of Directors was, that the worst enemies of the natives of India were those who endeavoured to sow discord between them and the government of the East-India Company, and thereby undermining its authority. He could assure the Court that there was the utmost desire and the strongest feeling on the part of the Directors to endeavour to do fair and substantial justice to all parties with whom they came in connection in that country. He therefore hoped his hon. friend would see the necessity of not pressing any further this question; at all events he hoped the Court would not give the motion their assent.

General Briggs supported the motion.

Mr. Weeding opposed it.

Mr. Sullivan replied, and read a long quotation from a pamphlet published some years ago by the hon. Chairman, in which he enforced the same views upon this question which he (Mr. Sullivan) now entertained.

The Chairman admitted that he had entertained the views ascribed to him by his hon. friend, but the difference between himself and his hon. friend was this:—He (the Chairman) was not so opinionated as to believe that he had a right for ever to maintain opinions which had been overruled in a legitimate and proper manner by those who had a right so to overrule them. He could not understand how any man could perform any public duty at all if he were bound to adhere to his own fixed opinions and insist upon them to the end of his life. (Hear, hear.) He confessed that he did regret very much that Sir James Carnac's promise, having been made, was not fulfilled to the letter, but the Council of Bombay stated that the promise so made was only on the individual opinion of Sir James Carnac, and which opinion was overruled by the Council. He would repeat, after fifteen or sixteen years' experience in that Court, that the constant re-agitation of the Sattara question had acted most prejudicially for the interests of the native princes, because it had induced them to turn from that authority which was able to do them justice and to look to others who were not able to do anything to their advantage. He did not wish to re-open the question, but he had read a letter from India, in which it was stated that the Ranees had been advised, by certain parties in England, not to receive what the Court of Directors had offered. If persons in this country did write such letters with a view to mislead those unhappy individuals, he hoped that those persons who followed that course would consider that it was one which could not do any party the least good. At the conclusion of the letter it was stated that the Ranees, in every respect, evinced a sincere wish to abide by the orders of the Government, and that she had sent to the writer of the letter all the correspondence she had received from her advisers in England. Some of the letters were written by one honourable gentleman, urging the Ranees to refuse all offers of accommodation, and promising her every success if she continued to agitate her claims. The end of the Ranees' letter was in these words:—"I shall issue the necessary order for the withdrawal of my agent from London, and that he forbear all further agitation on my behalf. If any agitation should hereafter take place, it will not be from any wish of mine." (Hear.)

Mr. Sullivan asked if he, as a member of that Court, knew that the Governor-General had made to the Ranees a proposal in the highest degree unjust, in the face of all the promises that had been made to her and the late Rajah; did he depart from the right course if he wrote to the Ranees to advise her by no means to submit to the proposition? Where was his crime? Where was his offence? He would repeat that the parties were at this very moment in a state of distress; and that the British Government had taken from them 50 lacs of rupees, and in lieu thereof had given them 10,000 rupees a month.

The motion was then put and negatived.

THE MADRAS SEPOYS.

Mr. Lewin renewed his motion, that the Court of Directors take such measures as were necessary to instruct the local authorities in India to insert in the articles of war a clause which should give to the native Sepoy the right of having a copy of the record of any Court-martial, similar to that which was already enjoyed by the European soldier.

The motion, not being seconded, fell to the ground.

Col. Dickenson gave notice of the following motions to be brought forward at the next General Court of Proprietors:—

That a fixed per-centage of the revenue of each collectorate in Guzerat be annually expended for the improvement of the public ways throughout that province.

That a list be prepared, with as little delay as possible, and laid before the Court of Proprietors, of those native states with which treaties have been entered into by the British Government, and thereby deprived of any of the rights or privileges of adoption, without the consent of the paramount power.

The Court then adjourned.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PRESENTATIONS AT THE LEVEE.—At the second levee held by her Majesty on the 6th inst. the following gentlemen were presented, "on return from India:—

Mr. G. M. Berford, Bengal service, by his father, Capt. Berford. The Bishop of Bombay, by Lord Broughton. Major John Bower, by Lieut. gen. Sir P. Maitland. Lieut. F. V. R. Jervis, by Lord Broughton. Col. T. Leighton, by Lieut. gen. Sir D. Leighton. Dr. G. J. Shaw, by Lord Broughton.

PERSIAN BIRDS.—Three specimens of the Jerooftee (Perdix Pondicerianus) have been presented to the Zoological Society by Mr. Keith Abbot, who brought them from Persia.

GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY OF BENGAL.—The first meeting for settling the lists of contributories was held before his Honour Master Humphry, on the 4th February. The solicitor for Mr. Quilter, the official manager, in opening the proceedings, stated that the Company was projected in 1845 for a railway between Calcutta and Rajmahal, on the Ganges, with a proposed capital of £4,000,000. About 40,000 shares were taken by the public, and the deposit, amounting to £10,000, paid to the directors. In 1847, an agreement was come to with the East Indian Railway Company, that the Great Western Railway of Bengal should cease its operations and dissolve, and that any of its shareholders who chose should be allowed to exchange their scrip for East Indian Railway scrip; and that the East Indian Railway Company should be entitled to a rateable proportion, according to the number of shares so exchanged, of the funds of the Great Western of Bengal unexpended at that period, amounting to about £1,000. It appeared, however, that the directors of the Bengal Company, instead of making immediate distribution of the funds, had gone on until they were reduced to £1,400, which was about the amount that had come into the hands of the official manager; and this amount, less the debts, which were very trifling, and the expense of winding up, would be divisible among the proprietors. Possibly there might be a larger fund for division, as it was contended by some of the contributories that the directors were responsible for the frittering away of the funds since the agreement was entered into, and when, in fact, the Company ought to have been dissolved, as it had ceased to exist for all material purposes. His Honour said, he should not place any of the parties on the list, until, at another meeting, he had gone fully into the merits of the case; but as regarded all those parties who had neither accepted shares, paid the deposit, nor signed the deed, he directed the official manager to strike them off.

HENRY THOMY PRINSEP, Esq., a director of the East-India Company, was elected, on the 5th March, to represent the borough of Harwich, in the room of Sir John Cam Hobhouse, created Lord Broughton.

SIR CHARLES NAPIER arrived in London on Wednesday, from Dover, having stopped for a short time at Folkestone, where his family are residing.

THE EAST-INDIA AND CHINA ASSOCIATION have issued their statement for the past year. The suspension by the East-India Company of the practice of making advances upon the hypothecation of goods in the respective presidencies is noticed with satisfaction, and it is stated that the Company have been enabled to sell bills here to the amount of £3,493,514 at rates of exchange which have advanced from 1s. 11d. to 2s. 1d.,—a system which they contemplate continuing with respect to their draughts for £3,000,000 during the coming year. The determination of the Government not to propose a select committee in connection with the renewal of the Charter; the postal regulations with China; the adulteration of coffee, to the injury of the Ceylon cultivators; the oppressive duty on pepper, which, amounting to nearly 200 per cent. on its cost, checks consumption and encourages adulteration,—are also adverted to. They have urged upon the Chancellor of the Exchequer a reduction of the tea duty from 2s. 2½d. to 1s. per lb., being still 100 per cent. on the bond price; and they intend to call the notice of the Government to the injurious anomaly which exists in the circumstance that teas are received here from the United States at the same duty as if imported direct from China, while tea shipped from Great Britain to the United States pays a duty of 25 per cent. above that on direct importation. Correspondence has been continued with the Foreign-office regarding the British trade at the ports of Ningpo and Foo-chowfoo, and attention has been promised by Lord Palmerston to the suggestions on the subject from the Canton Chamber of Commerce. The recent modifications in the Netherlands navigation laws; the necessity for resistance on the part of our Government to the Chinese proclamation of the 9th June last, attempting to violate the treaty of Nankin by the revival of the old Co-hong monopoly at Canton; the desirableness of promoting increased intercourse with Siam, and the usual shipping and mail statistics, constitute the remaining topics of the report.

EXPORT OF SILVER TO INDIA.—Considerable purchases of silver continue to be made for transmission to India.

Sir James Mackintosh, in a letter from Bombay, written in the monsoon, shortly after his arrival, says:—"The air was delightfully cooled, and we all exulted in our deliverance; but we were too quick in our triumph; we soon found that we were to pay in health for what we got in pleasure. Dr. Moseley's paradox I now perfectly understand, that the diseases of hot countries arise chiefly from cold. We, new-comers, threw open every window, and put on our thinnest cotton jackets, to enjoy the coolness. The experienced Indians clothed themselves thickly, and carefully excluded currents of air. We soon found that they were right. Lady M. has suffered considerably, and I a little, from the cold of Bombay."

The Calcutta Christian Advocate publishes a circular from Sir W. Burton, one of her Majesty judges of the Supreme Court at Madras, announcing his intention to write a work on religion and education in India, and calling upon competent persons to assist him with authentic materials.

Colonel Skinner, who was present at the interview between Ameer Khan and Sir D. Ochterlony, describes the Patan free-booter as "poor and mean-looking, dressed in a blue turban and dirty white upper garment. He spoke but little, and what he said was trifling, plebeian, and in bad style. He said he was king of Hindostan, but resigned his claim to it from friendship to the general. His attendants talked lightly of him, and abused him for truckling to the English. His followers were fops in dress, and ridiculous bullies in talking."

BOOKS.

Military Memoir of Lieut. Col. James Skinner, C.B., for many Years a distinguished Officer commanding a Corps of Irregular Cavalry in the Service of the H.E.I.C.; interspersed with Notices of several of the Principal Personages who distinguished themselves in the Service of the Native Powers in India. By J. BAILLIE FRASER, Esq. Two vols. London. Smith, Elder, and Co.

No one who has mingled in Anglo-Indian society can be ignorant of the name and merits, professional and social, of James Skinner. Intwoven as his exploits are with the military history of British India, he ran no risk of being forgotten; nevertheless, we are glad to see a little history of his own career, compiled, too, by one who knew him, and partly from materials supplied by himself.

Unlike George Thomas, De Boigne, and other contemporary personages, who rose to eminence in those disturbed times, when the mutual conflicts of native princes kept India in perpetual turmoil, James Skinner was not a European adventurer, but a native of the country, where he was born in 1778. His father, he says, was a native of Scotland, in the military service of the Company; his mother, a Rajpootni, the daughter of a zemindar, taken prisoner at the age of fourteen in a war with Rajah Cheyt Sing. His father (then an ensign), into whose hands she fell, treated her with kindness, and she bore him six children, three boys and three girls. The latter married gentlemen in the Company's service. In 1790, his mother put herself to death, owing to her daughters being taken from her and sent to school, whereby the sanctity of the pardah was, in her opinion, violated, and the Rajpoot honour destroyed. The eldest son went to sea, and James and his younger brother, Robert, were sent to a charity-school until 1794, when their father, becoming a captain, could afford to remove them to a boarding-school. In 1796, James was bound apprentice to a printer. Disgusted with this occupation, he ran away, and, being without money, for a time earned a scanty subsistence by carrying loads, or doing jobs for threepence a day. A relation found him, and took him to Calcutta, where his godfather, Colonel Burn, hearing that he panted to be a soldier, gave him a letter of recommendation to General De Boigne, commanding the Mahratta army of Dowlut Rao Sindia, at Coel, who appointed him ensign in a Nujeeb battalion at Muttra, under the command of Colonel Sutherland, a Scotchman.

He was soon in active service, reducing refractory rajahs in Bundelcund, which increased his ardour for a military life, and he studied to become a proficient in all the Hindu modes of warfare, learning the use of the Mahratta spear, archery, and the sword exercise, from which he derived great advantage. He likewise ingratiated himself with the native chiefs, whom he found, he says, "a good, generous-hearted race of men."

At this time (1797) Sindia became embroiled with the Bhyes, or widows of his uncle, Madhajee Sindia, and in the consequent hostilities, Skinner, who commanded a battalion, distinguished himself, and gained rewards and promotion. He then moved with the Mahratta force into Rajpootana, and was present at the great battle in which the Rajah of Jeypore was beaten, when Skinner, plundering the rajah's deserted bungalow, secured "two golden idols, with diamond eyes," and a brass fish, which proved to be the ensign of honour bestowed by the king of Delhi upon the rajah. He now was promoted to a captaincy.

In the beginning of 1800, in a contest with the Ooneara rajah, whose territory lay near Tonk-Rampoorah, his career was nearly brought to a close. His party, being obliged to retreat, were cut up, and Skinner, shot through the groin, laid for a day and night on the field, where he would have died, but for the humanity of an old Chumar (low caste) woman, whom he richly rewarded, and never forgot, calling her his mother.

On his recovery, he was still further advanced by General Perron, and in 1801, assisted at the battle of Soundah, and subsequently in the operations against George Thomas, and in the battle at Georgeghur, which, Skinner says, was the severest he had ever seen. He condemns the conduct of Thomas, who, on this occasion, neglected his advantages, and afterwards "took to drinking." His town and fort of Hansi were soon after surrendered, and Thomas (of whom some curious anecdotes are related) shortly after died.

One of these anecdotes illustrates the character of this adventurer. Upon the surrender of the fort of Hansi, Major Bourquin, a Frenchman, the commander of the Mahratta troops, whom Skinner describes as "not only a coward, but a fool," invited Thomas to dine with him and his officers. He came with about fifty of his sowars, much affected by his misfortunes. "After dinner," he says, "we did all we could to cheer Thomas, taking great care to avoid anything that might give him offence. By 11 o'clock, we all had got pretty merry with drinking bumpers to 'General Perron,' and to himself, and Thomas was quite happy; when, all of a sudden, Bourquoïn called out, 'Let us drink to the success of Perron's arms.' At this, we all turned up our glasses, and Thomas, bursting into tears, and putting his hand to his sword, called out to Bourquoïn that it was not to him but to his own ill fate that his fall was due; then, drawing, 'One Irish sword,' said he, 'is still sufficient for a hundred Frenchmen.' Bourquoïn, in terror, jumping from his chair, ran out of the tent, calling for his guard. Thomas's sowars, hearing the hubbub, rushed in, and we, apprehensive of a row, called out to them to keep off, as it was only the sahib, who was drunk; whilst Thomas, waving his sword in the midst of us, called out, in Hindoostani, to look how he had made the d—d Frenchman run like a jackal! It was not without much persuasion that we got Thomas at last to sheath his sword. We then got the soldiers out of the tent, and when Thomas had sat down, we explained to him that the wine had made Bourquoïn forget himself, but that he must not regard it as an insult, but agree to make it up. To this he at once consented, and, seeking Bourquoïn, we brought him in; he immediately shook Thomas's hand, and told him he was sorry for what he had said."

In 1803, on the eve of the great Mahratta war, the English and country-born officers in the service of Sindia were dismissed, to the great chagrin of Skinner. "He was a complete native," observes his biographer; "he had no tie to Britain; his father was dead; he knew little or nothing of his other relatives, and he desired to stick to the colours he had hitherto served under." He was, however, prevailed upon by Capt. Carnegie, a fellow-officer, to claim British protection, and was introduced to Lord Lake, who received him kindly, and proposed that he should raise a troop of horse, which Skinner refused, declaring he would never draw sword against Sindia or Perron. Further acquaintance created a warm attachment between Lord Lake and Skinner, who, at length, after the battle of Deeg, accepted the command of a body of horse, on the express stipulation, however, that he was never to be employed against his old master.

This was the commencement of Skinner's connection with the British service, in which it is unnecessary to follow him, since his feats and those of his "yellow boys" are, as we have before said, chronicled in history. The success of Colonel Skinner in the management of his corps resulted partly from his being himself a native of the country. Sir John Malcolm, one of his warmest friends, in urging him to write a memoir of his corps, observes: "With respect to the merits of our irregular horse, you know my sentiments. Yours are the best I have seen, but they have had great advantages. You are as good an Englishman as I know; but you are also a native irregular, half-born and fully bred. You armed them, understand their characters, enter into their prejudices; can encourage them without spoiling them; know what they can, and, what is more important, what they cannot do. Your rissaldars are men, generally speaking, not only of character, but of family; those under them are their dependents. These are links which it is difficult for the mere European officers to keep up."

Colonel Skinner's services were rewarded, in 1830, with the rank of Lieut. Colonel in his Majesty's service, and the companionship of the Bath, in addition to a jaghire in perpetuity. In December, 1841, he died, at the age of sixty-three. He was humble, unostentatious, kind-hearted, and (writes one of his friends) "a man of sincere piety." He built an Episcopal church at Delhi, at the expense of £20,000, where he was buried.

Mr. Fraser has incorporated the incidents of Colonel Skinner's personal history with a narrative of the stirring political events with which they are associated, and interspersed some biographical notices of remarkable individuals, which add to the interest of the work.

The British Officer; his Position, Duties, Emoluments, and Privileges: being a Digest and Compilation of the Rules, Regulations, Warrants, and Memoranda, relating to the Duties, Promotion, Pay, and Allowances of the Officers in Her Majesty's Service and in that of the Hon. East-India Company; with Notices of the Military Colleges, &c.; and a Variety of Information regarding the Regular Regiments and Local Corps in both Services, &c. &c. By J. H. STOCQUELER. London. Smith, Elder, and Co.

THE ample description given of this very useful work in the title-page sufficiently explains its scope. The object of the author has been to place within the reach of officers and of the public, in a condensed shape, all the rules, regulations, and usages, of a personal nature, which concern the commissioned ranks of the service, thus filling up "a great gap in our military literature of reference and utility;" affording to British officers especially information with which, though important to them, they are, as a body, "very imperfectly acquainted." Mr. Stocqueler has executed his task ably, having embodied, in a portable and handsome volume, a vast amount of miscellaneous matter, highly valuable for instruction and reference.

A few Words on Indian Affairs, in a Letter to the Right Hon. Lord John Russell. By JOHN SULLIVAN, Esq. Ridgway.

THIS is a brief remonstrance against the Ministerial declaration, that there is no present intention, on the part of the Government, to move for the appointment of a select committee on the affairs of India, and, by implication, that if no change in the present system is contemplated, Parliament will be called upon to renew it without any previous inquiry.

Mr. Sullivan urges, that inquiries have been heretofore considered necessary previous to the renewal of the East-Indian Act, and that beneficial changes have resulted from such inquiries; that, as our Indian empire has nearly doubled in extent since 1812, as very large additions have been made to it since 1833, as there has been a corresponding increase in every department of the public service, as the interests of India are now identified with those of England in a degree that did not exist at former periods, and as what was only unsatisfactory in 1842 has become positively alarming since, "for the most cheering prospect of the most sanguine calculator is, that we may be able to establish a small excess of receipts over expenses in time of peace, leaving us no alternative but further to add to a debt which has already increased from thirty-four to forty-three millions within the last ten years, whenever we again engage in war;"—inquiry is more essential now than at former epochs of renewal. "The question now for the consideration of Parliament is," he says, "whether the Government of India, as now constituted, both at home and abroad, has worked well for India and for England during the last twenty-five years; and how," he asks, "is it possible for Parliament to solve it, without such a searching inquiry into every branch of the Indian administration as preceded all previous legislation for that great empire?"

It is remarkable that an English reader of history is unable to obtain any authentic account of Asōka, or Dharmasōka (as he is frequently called), the grandson of Chandragupta, who, by a happy divination of Sir W. Jones, once much doubted but fully established by modern scholarship, is clearly identified with the Sandracottus of the Greeks. He was apparently unknown to Sir W. Jones; even so late as 1836, James Prinsep, when on the eve of his brilliant discoveries, considered him an "ideal personage;" Professor Wilson, in the year 1849, would seem to cling to the idea that his is only "the shadow of a name;" Mr. Elphinstone despatches him in a few sentences; and other historians make no mention of him. And yet the materials exist for a more full and accurate history of Asōka than of any Hindu king who ever reigned.—Sir E. Perry.

ENCOUNTER WITH AN ELEPHANT. —A correspondent of the Colombo Observer, whose veracity is vouched for by the editor of that paper, states that, whilst passing along a road which winds through a tract of forest, in Upper Bullatgama, Ceylon, he was pursued by an elephant, which, after attempting to escape, he faced, and when the animal was within a foot or two of him, he says, "I commenced, with the small stick I held in my hand (not thicker than my thumb), a violent assault upon the lower portion of the trunk, and the effect was astonishing; the animal's progress was arrested, and he made no effort to defend himself, beyond curling up his trunk, and bending his head slightly downwards. Following up the advantage thus gained by repeated blows of my stick, the elephant gave in, and, turning a little to my left, bolted into the jungle."

Chang-II-chen, in his "Precious Words to awaken the Age," lays down the following rule, which is as worthy of a Christian as of a Confucian:—"Should any one perchance speak evil of me, it would be well for me to inquire of myself whether I have done anything to deserve it, for if so, he has but spoken the truth, and I have no occasion to be angry with him; and if not, he has told a falsehood, and therefore can have done me no real injury."

CANTEEN.

EAST-INDIA COMPANY'S BARRACKS, WARLEY, NEAR BRENTWOOD, ESSEX.

East-India House, London, 19th March, 1851.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the CANTEEN in the above-mentioned Barracks is to be LET, upon the following Conditions, from the 26th May, 1851, to the 25th May, 1854.

No person but of unexceptionable character, nor any person who will not undertake bona fide to reside in the Canteen, and conduct the business thereof in his own person, will be approved; and two sureties will be required for the regular payment of the rent, and of all sums which may become due in respect of the said Canteen, and for the due performance of the several conditions and stipulations of the indenture of lease. The revenue or other licenses to be paid by the tenant.

The person whose proposal shall be accepted (and his sureties) must execute an indenture of lease, and covenants relating thereto; the particulars whereof may be known by applying at this House, or at the Office of the Commandant of the Company's Depot, Warley Barracks, Essex.

The names of two respectable persons, with their Christian names, professions, and places of abode, who will join the tenant in executing the indenture of lease, as his sureties, must be inserted in the proposals, and no proposal will be attended to which is not accompanied by the written consent of the persons named to be the proposer's sureties. The tenant is to pay the full value of the stamps on the indenture of lease upon executing the same, and it is to be understood that the East-India Company will not undertake to procure the tenant a license.

Sealed proposals, addressed to the Secretary, East-India House, London, with the words, "Tender for Canteen, Warley Barracks," written on the outside cover, will be received at this House, at or before 11 o'clock of the morning of Wednesday, the 16th April, 1851, after which hour any proposal received cannot be noticed.

By the Mutiny Act, Canteens are not liable to have troops billeted on them.

JAMES C. MELVILL, Secretary.

At the ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of this Society, held on Thursday, the 28th day of November, 1850,

BENJAMIN PHILLIPS, Esq., F.R.S., in the Chair,

The accounts for the ninth year of the Society's business ending the 30th September, 1850, and the Report of the Auditors thereon, having been read and duly received, the following Report of the Directors was also read:—

REPORT.

"The Directors are happy to have it in their power to inform the Shareholders, that the financial year ending the 30th September, 1850, has furnished the most satisfactory results which they have yet had to lay before the Shareholders, whether as regards the amount of new business done, or the extent of losses incurred.

"During the year ending the 30th September, 1850, there have been issued no fewer than 569 policies for assurances, amounting to 213,469l. 16s. 11d., and yielding an annual revenue, on the new policies thus effected, of 9,163l. 13s. 7d.

"This exceeds the amount of business transacted by this office in any former year, not only in the number of policies, and the sums assured by those policies, but also in the yearly premiums payable upon them.

"The following table shows the results of the business transacted in each year since the establishment of the Society:—

YEAR.	Number of New Policies issued in each Year.	Sums Assured by New Policies in each Year.	Annual Premiums payable on New Policies in each Year.
1842	130	£55,245 1 0	£1,882 13 7
1843	208	87,830 16 11	4,992 18 6
1844	197	80,415 8 6	4,120 4 3
1845	258	103,014 11 0	5,563 17 0
1846	199	83,700 14 5	4,985 8 5
1847	313	113,542 4 8	4,237 3 4
1848	412	124,458 17 9	4,980 2 8
1849	475	201,712 15 6	7,496 0 6
1850	569	213,469 16 11	9,163 13 7
Total.	2,761	£1,063,390 6 8	£47,422 1 6

"It is plain from this statement, that in the course of a very few years, the Society has acquired a very large amount of business, equalled by few of the Assurance Companies in the metropolis.

"The Directors wish to impress on the Shareholders the important fact that this rapid acquisition of business is not owing to any accidental cause, but has taken place uniformly throughout the whole field of the Society's operations, showing clearly the confidence reposed in the Society by the public.

"It is also most gratifying to be able to report that the losses by deaths during the past year have been less than in any preceding year since 1844; from which it appears that, with the exception of the three first years of the Society, when the number of policies in force was not one-fourth of the present number, the mortality has been less than in any other.

"The Directors have only further to state, that the Members of the Board going out of office by rotation are Edward Doubleday, Esq., and Robert Bentley Todd, M.D.; and the Auditors also going out of office by rotation are James Parker Deane, D.C.L., and Martial Lawrence Welch, Esq., all of whom, being eligible, offer themselves for re-election.

"The Directors and Auditors retiring from office having been duly re-elected without opposition, the usual votes of thanks were given."

Prospectuses, containing very full tables of rates, forms of proposal, and every other information, will be forwarded, postage free, on application to any of the Society's Agents, or to the Secretary, at the chief office, 25, Pall Mall.

This Society offers a lower and more economical scale of Premiums for Life Assurance than hitherto demanded by the established Offices in India.

Annual Premium for assuring 1,000 rupees:—

CIVIL.			MILITARY AND NAVAL.
Age.	With Profits.	Without Profits.	Age.	With Profits.	Without Profits.
20	Rs. 33	Rs. 31	20	Rs. 38	Rs. 35

60	82	77	60	84	79

All holders of Policies in India on the Profit scale, who may have paid five annual premiums, will be entitled, at the expiration of the fifth year, to a year's profit, calculated on the average of the preceding five years; such profit to be paid in cash, or to go in diminution of the future premiums payable, or to be added to the sum assured by the policy, at the option of the holder, after the calculation of the profits shall have been made in London.

After the expiration of 1851, the profits will be declared annually, and the payers of five complete annual premiums be regularly entitled to a participation therein, with a like option as to the mode of application.

Parties assured in India for Life shall, on their return to England for a permanency, and on the first half-yearly premium becoming due, be entitled to come upon the English rates of premium, and be placed under the rules and conditions of the Society there obtaining.

All parties assured for Life, or for terms other than for Life, whatever the number of payments, or the permanency or otherwise of their residence in Europe, shall, after completing a full year from the date of their quitting India, and on the first half-yearly premium thereafter becoming due, be entitled to a reduction of their premium to the English rates, such reduced rates being continued during their further residence in Europe.

Notices of Assignments of Policies will be duly registered at the Office of the Secretaries.

The Society also grants ENDOWMENTS and DEFERRED ANNUITIES for India, the Tables for which, with full information, may be had at the Office of the Family Endowment Society, No. 12, Chatham Place; or at the Office of the Secretaries in Calcutta, Messrs. GORDON, STUART, and Co.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 9th of May, 1849, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums. This will be found a liberal reduction if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

HINDUSTANI WORKS BY JOHN SHAKESPEAR, Esq.

I.

NEW EDITION, with GREAT ADDITIONS.

This Day is published, the 4th Edition, in 1 vol. 4to. price £5. 5s. in boards, SHAKESPEAR'S HINDUSTANI and ENGLISH DICTIONARY, GREATLY ENLARGED: to which is added, a DICTIONARY, ENGLISH and HINDUSTANI, ENTIRELY NEW.

••• To the First Part of this Dictionary, the author has, by laborious study of Hindustani works, both printed and manuscript, made the most extensive additions. In the Hindustani and English Part, the Hindustani words are printed in their proper characters, together with the pronunciation in Roman letters. The Derivatives, which are traced from the Sanskrit, Arabic, Hebrew, Persian, and Greek, are given respectively in the character peculiar to each of those languages.

The Second Part, English and Hindustani, is ENTIRELY NEW. It comprises the most common English words, and also numerous usual phrases, with the fittest corresponding translations into Hindustani.

REVIEW in "Times," Jan. 3.—"Much attention has been paid to the collecting of scientific terms, especially botanical ones, as well as to the correct rendering them into the technology of Europe." ••• "The Hindustani and English Part of it now contains upwards of 53,000 words and phrases explained, being 7,000 more than in the last edition, and 11,000 more than in any other Dictionary of the like description now extant." ••• "In India, as well as in Europe, the character of this work has long been fully established, and the present edition will greatly enhance its reputation."

II.

5th Edition, 1 vol. royal 8vo. price 14s.

A GRAMMAR of the HINDUSTANI LANGUAGE. To which is added, a short Grammar of the Dakhni.

III.

1 vol. royal 8vo. price £1. 10s.

An INTRODUCTION to the HINDUSTANI LANGUAGE. Designed especially for those who have no Instructor.

IV.

In 2 vols. 4to. price £1. 16s.

MUNTAKHABAT-I-HINDI; or, SELECTIONS in HINDUSTANI. With a verbal translation and grammatical analysis of some parts, for the use of Students of that language.

VARICOSE VEINS, WEAKNESS, FRACTURES, SPRAINS, &c.

HUXLEY'S SURGICAL CAOUTCHOUC ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE-CAPS, &c., are now daily patronized by all the leading members of the profession. Their superiority over every other fabric for artificial support is admitted by all who inspect them. They afford an equal, comforting, and permanent pressure on every portion of the limb, and are drawn on with the facility of an ordinary stocking. H. and Co. guarantee a comfort and support hitherto unknown in any other form of bandage. It is well known that all kinds of Surgical Stockings lately used have a tendency to impede the free and healthy action of the muscles, thereby producing relaxation and great diminution of the limb. Only to be obtained at HUXLEY'S Parisian Shirt Warehouse, 5, Vere Street, Cavendish Square.

KIDSTON'S MECHANICAL LEECH.

WM. KIDSTON and Co., 18, Bishopsgate Street Without, London, in directing the attention of the medical profession to their newly-invented instrument, termed "Kidston's Mechanical Leech," think it would be superfluous and presumptuous to make any comment in its behalf, further than drawing their attention to the testimonials in its favour, published in the "Lancet" of September 28, and in the Pharmaceutical Journal for October.

Full instructions for use will accompany the instruments.

Price per set of instruments,—i.e. three "Leeches," or Vacuum Glasses, with Puncturing Instrument electro plated, in neat morocco case, complete,—£2. 5s.

TO LADIES.—The high and universal celebrity which ROWLAND'S KALYDOR continues to maintain as an active, yet mild and soothing, extirpator of all impurities of the skin, is, during the period of Spring, most pleasingly evinced. This preparation, eminently balsamic, restorative, and invigorating, is equally distinguished for safety in application, as for unfailing efficacy in eradicating all redness, tan, pimples, spots, freckles, discolorations, and other cutaneous visitations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek, and the softness and delicacy which it induces on the hands and arms, render it indispensable to every toilet. To ladies during the period of nursing, and as a wash for infants, it cannot be too strongly recommended. Gentlemen, after shaving, will find it allay all irritation and tenderness of the skin, and render it soft, smooth, and pleasant. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, for the growth, and for preserving, improving, and beautifying the human hair. Price 3s. 6d. and 7s.; family bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

ROWLAND'S QUINTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, for preserving and beautifying the teeth, strengthening the gums, and for rendering the breath sweet and pure. Price 2s. 6d. per box.

••• BEWARE OF SPURIOUS IMITATIONS.—The only genuine of each bears the name of "ROWLAND'S," preceding that of the article, on the wrapper or label. Sold by them at 20, Hatton Garden, London; and by chemists and perfumers.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.

SCURVY, LEPROSY, SCROFULA, and all DISEASES

Of the SKIN, can be cured by HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS. The heaviness, weariness, dejection of spirits, and other oppressions, usually attendant on those who suffer from disease of the skin, are speedily removed by the use of Holloway's Ointment and Pills. The efficacy of these medicines in improving the bad habit of body, and in curing complaints of this distressing nature, stands unrivalled; and in many parts abroad, where the malady is so prevalent, the cures are wonderful. The purifying properties of the Pills, and the peculiar effect the Ointment has on the skin, render them superior to every other remedy.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

(late Waghorn and Co.), Oriental and General Agents, 156, Leadenhall Street, and Universal Office, Regent Circus.

EMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION.

IMMIGRATION being much required in AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, &c., and as the supposed expense of an OUTFIT often prevents individuals emigrating, S. W. SILVER and Co., CLOTHIERS, OUTFITTERS, and CONTRACTORS (having a large interest to maintain in those Colonies), have been advised to make known that they can supply a comfortable OUTFIT, including Bedding, for MALE or FEMALE Emigrants, from Four Pounds (net) upwards, or less (Two Pounds if needful), and for Children in proportion, at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN (opposite the London Tavern), where lists will be given on application.

S. W. S. & Co., being the makers of nearly every article in all the Outfits they supply, and as one of their objects is to promote EMIGRATION, they neither receive from Agents, or pay the too usual commission to any person introducing Passengers to be fitted out, so that the Passage and Outfit may be procured at the least possible expense; but they will, on application, advise Passengers how to obtain the most economic passage to the Colonies. They have a Representative in every Australian Colony, to whom they ship Clothing monthly; thus they would forward small parcels free of expense.

NAVAL and MILITARY OFFICERS, MIDSHIPMEN, CADETS, CIVILIANS, LADIES, &c., are outfitted as heretofore, at the CABIN-PASSENGER OUTFITTING Warehouse, Nos. 66 and 67, CORNHILL (the Emigration Outfitting being exclusively at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN), LONDON, and each branch at ST. GEORGE'S CRESCENT, LIVERPOOL.

APPOINTMENTS to INDIA and the COLONIES.—

Agents, Assistant-Surgeons, and others appointed to India, Officers joining their Regiments, and all those who have or who are expecting Appointments to India, China, or to any other of the Colonies, may obtain Detailed Lists of the necessary Outfit for every appointment, full particulars of the Overland Route to India, Rates of Passage-Money, Allowance of Baggage, &c., on application to Messrs. THRESHER and GLENNY, East-India and General Outfitters, 152, Strand, London. The only house in the kingdom where THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE WAISTCOAT can be procured.

EAST-INDIA UNITED SERVICE AGENCY,

53, CHARING CROSS, and 25, SPRING GARDENS.

MAJOR R. D. WHITE (twenty-nine years in the Bengal Army) will be happy to receive gentlemen connected with India and the Colonies, or attend to their written communications.

Passages secured by Sea or overland; Houses or Apartments engaged; Regimental Messes; Wines and Stores; Outfits, &c., supplied; and every description of Agency business transacted.

No charge for subscription to the Agency or Rooms, but every information furnished.

EAST-INDIA ARMY and GENERAL AGENCY,

136, LEADENHALL STREET.

We have taken into partnership Mr. JAMES CUNDY, late of the Madras Army.

In thus having secured the services of a gentleman who, by long residence in India, has gained considerable practical knowledge, we feel that we have best consulted the interests of our old friends, and, we hope, show good reason for an accession of new.

On personal application at our office, or on inquiry by letter, every information and assistance will be given to parties arriving from or intending to embark for India, China, and the Colonies, and constituents in England will have prompt attention paid to their wishes, and will find in the Reading-room the latest newspapers, as well as every information they may require on all topics relating to India.

Detailed Estimates of Outfits for Writers, Cadets, and Assistant-Surgeons have been prepared with much care, showing the comparative expense between a journey overland, ad idem, and a voyage by the long sea route.

Drafts and Letters of Credit on Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, and China, in large or small sums, are also granted at this Agency.

JAMES BARBER and Co.

INDIA.—Gentlemen expecting Appointments in the East-India Company's Cavalry, Artillery, Infantry, or Medical Service, are respectfully informed that, on application to Messrs. CHRISTIAN, they will be furnished with carefully prepared ESTIMATES, showing the whole cost of outfit and passage via the Cape or Egypt, without the necessity of employing an agent, which will be found desirable to those who study economy. 11, Wigmore Street, Cavendish Square.

DRAFTS and LETTERS of CREDIT on CALCUTTA, MADRAS, and BOMBAY, are granted by Messrs. GRINDLAY & Co., in sums to suit the convenience of applicants, without any charge for commission. Also, CIRCULAR LETTERS of CREDIT for Travellers on the Continent, available in every principal town in Europe.

THE object of this Advertisement is to give publicity to the most valuable and efficient remedy that has yet been introduced in the practice of Medicine, for the purpose of removing every unsightly appearance from the Skin. Extensive experience and minute observation have convinced the Proprietor that, if applied as directed, it will remove any unsightly appearance, such as Tan, Sun-burns, Pimples, and Eruptions, which may disfigure the countenance; and will also impart to the Skin the most delightful softness and delicate clearness; in short, to preserve a pleasing complexion through life, nothing is required but the use of

GODFREY'S EXTRACT OF ELDER FLOWERS,

The sweetest and really the most perfect Beautifier in Nature.

This admirable preparation of Elder Flowers is very fragrant as a Perfume, and so efficacious, that the result of its application cannot fail to prove, in the highest degree, beneficial and satisfactory.

The Proprietor has, in private practice, very narrowly watched its effects upon all Diseases of the Skin, and, from proofs incontestable, is enabled to pronounce it most decidedly superior to any other preparation which has come under his observation,—and he has, by way of experiment, tried all the most popular ones,—but none will bear even a slight comparison with it, either for its sweetness or its surprising effect in clearing and softening the Skin, in rendering the complexion beautifully fair, and in producing a surface of the most perfect elegance. All this is accomplished by its power of speedily and completely removing, not only those lesser enemies of Beauty, as Redness, Tan, Sun-burns, &c., but also all its more decided foes, which generally peep out in the most conspicuous places; they need not be named, but those who are plagued and annoyed by them may be assured that the Extract of Elder Flowers possesses an influence over them which must be seen to be believed; for it will remove every unsightly appearance, and improve every complexion, and, by persevering in its use, the Skin will become and continue delicately soft, clear, and smooth.

Elder Flowers have from the earliest ages been esteemed as a mild and harmless, yet most perfect beautifier of the Skin; but the difficulty of properly preserving them, so as to retain their virtues when dry, has put it beyond the power of people in general, or of the profession, to avail themselves of their usefulness. Elder Flower Water has been adopted in their stead, and found to a certain extent to answer as a substitute; but being a weak and imperfect preparation of the Flowers, and very liable to decomposition, it cannot be depended upon. This elegant and (in comparison with the Flowers) powerful preparation was discovered, like many of our most valuable medicinal agents, by mere accident; and the Proprietor having, from personal experience, good reason to think highly of Elder Flowers, as a remedy for all diseases of the Skin, at once determined, as opportunities offered, to give it an ample trial. The very first trial he made speaks volumes, and will be sufficient to induce any unprejudiced person who may require to try its effects. It was upon an elderly lady, who from her youth had a most inveterate humour in her face and neck, which had so increased with her age, that it was in a constant state of heat and irritation. She had lost all hope of a cure, having sought for the first advice, and used every means to remove it, but to no purpose. When this article was named, she willingly consented to try it, and, incredible as it may appear, the very first application considerably reduced the irritation, and from that period she lived in comparative ease,—of course, continued its use,—and in the space of about eight months the Skin had become perfectly healthy, had lost all its foul appearance, and had become nearly as clear as an infant's. Though the Proprietor has some hundreds of proofs of its efficacy, equal and even more surprising, he will instance only this first one, because such evidence in favour of a Medicine may be overcoloured, or entirely fabricated; but those who may wish to have a confirmation of the high character he has given it, need only make one trial, to be thoroughly convinced of the correctness of his statement. Such a circumstance to begin with naturally convinced him that it was an article which had just claims to a high distinction, and of course he did not fail to seek after and apply it in those cases which had baffled the skill of other Medical Men; and in doing so, his success was uniform. For great as is the variety of Diseases confined to the Skin, different as their causes may appear, whether local or constitutional, he invariably found the Extract of Elder Flowers to be absolute master of them all; it immediately improved, and ultimately cured, not only the mildest, but even the most malignant. It would require a large space to describe all the cases in which it might be used with advantage, but that is no reason why none should be named; therefore we will begin, as we have all done before, with infancy; and it is pretty well known that, for the first few years of our existence, we are very liable to and much distressed by many inflammatory affections of the Skin, more particularly about the neck, mouth, and ears: to avoid which, and to preserve the sweet appearance peculiar to childhood, it is only necessary to use GODFREY'S EXTRACT OF ELDER FLOWERS about two or three times in a week; and the best way to lay a good foundation for and make certain of a luxuriant crop of Hair, is to preserve the Skin in health, and resist the accumulation of Scurf. For that purpose, let the head be moistened with the Extract of Elder Flowers every other day, and the result will afford the most ample satisfaction, and show distinctly that this preparation is as well the se plus ultra of the Nursery as of the Toilet.

As we advance in years, other annoying and perplexing diseases are to be avoided. The worst, perhaps, is Ringworm; and the Proprietor feels not a little proud in having been the means of conferring upon his species a remedy so mild and pleasant, and yet so uniformly certain of not only preventing but absolutely curing Ringworm, and that, too, in the short space of one month: the worst cases are subdued in six weeks, at longest. When it has been proved to possess such power over a disease which has set at defiance the ingenuity of the first Medical Practitioners of the day, few will (at least, it is hoped so) be inclined to doubt the salutary influence it exerts over all the less virulent complaints incident to the Skin.

As we increase in years, or at that period which may be termed the spring of life, the COMPLEXION is subject to many and serious changes, when, from various causes, the Skin is likely to become discoloured, Humours generate and become confirmed, Pimples of different hues and sizes peep out, and Eruptions disfigure the countenance. At this trying age, all parents, who really value the comfort and welfare of their children, ought to avail themselves of every means to prevent the secretion of animalcules, which is the cause of all these evils. The Extract of Elder Flowers offers a ready, safe, and sure means of preventing it. It will destroy in embryo whatever may be generating in the small orifices of the Skin, preserve it free from taint, confirm it in health, and impart a beautiful transparency, which will probably afford a proud satisfaction for the rest of their days.

In the middle stage of life, when we become subject to Indigestion, which, by deranging the secretions, is very likely to check the necessary exhalation from the Skin, and thereby induce a sallow and bloated Countenance, sore Lips and Nose, inflammatory Eruptions, Carbuncles, &c., this preparation will be found of the greatest service, for by frequently damping the troubled part it will immediately stop and soon repel them; and, by keeping the pores of the Skin unobstructed, will cause the most fascinating pliability and softness, together with the constant appearance of cleanliness and health.

In the process of SHAVING it is invaluable, annihilating every pimple and all roughness, rendering the Skin soft, and its surface even and smooth, and preparing it so completely for the application of the razor, that the Proprietor earnestly enjoins every Gentleman who has any regard for his own comfort to try one Bottle, which will so well recommend itself, that he will undoubtedly recommend it to others.

In the autumn of life, when the Skin begins to lose its firmness, and become uneven, wrinkled, and loose, its effects are most consoling. Cleansing and bracing its pores, it secures a healthy and proper evaporation. And if, at a very advanced period of life, it will not preserve all the firmness, transparency, and freshness of youth, it will approximate very near to it; so much so, that, rely upon it, all who try it will be fully satisfied with its conservative effects.

Finally, it ought to be observed that, with whatever indifference many may profess to regard appearances, all are in some degree influenced by them,—many much more so than they themselves suspect; but, be that as it may, it is certainly to the interest of most, and must be desirable to all, to carry an appearance as pleasing as the nature of things will allow; and of whatever form the features may be, a clear and wholesome Skin must be deemed infinitely preferable to one which is sallow or covered with numerous eruptive specks and blemishes; therefore it is candidly submitted whether it does not behave every one to make use of those means which chance or science may have brought to light, to reduce and obviate, as much as possible, the ills which flesh is heir to.

Sold in Bottles, at 2s. 9d. each, by all Perfumers and Patent Medicine Venders.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

NOTHING definitive is announced in the intelligence by this mail respecting the Hyderabad question. The correspondent of the Englishman writes from the capital that the Resident had an audience of the Nizam on the 25th January, which was strictly private; but the conversation appears to have been sufficiently overheard (his Highness sometimes speaking in a loud tone) to afford materials for the following report, furnished by the correspondent:—

"The Resident's requisitions were to have his debt paid, and satisfactory arrangements made for accruing demands, and for the appointment of a minister. The Nizam replied,—'You know the state of my finances; I am unable to pay you otherwise than as I told you before,—by twelve lacs per annum.' His Highness observed that 'his ministers (this was overheard) had all been faithless to his interests (nemuk-haram), and that he would appoint some humble person.' The Resident said, no humble person would possess authority to control the turbulent Arab and Patan, or to check the defalcations of the Talookdars. I believe the conference terminated very unsatisfactorily, the Nizam not acceding to the demand for immediate payment, nor giving his confidence to the Resident as to the person whom he intended to appoint as minister. The ball was at the Resident's foot, had he been instructed to coerce the Nizam for the discharge of his debt; but I really believe there is some hitch in the instructions from England to the Government of India, forbidding the adoption of any course unsatisfactory to the Nizam. It is believed by some to have led only to a temporary postponement of Lord Dalhousie's intentions, and that he would manage to carry his point. The Nizam's selection of an humble individual for his minister has this meaning in it—that he will himself continue to preside over his own affairs. His Highness is obviously impracticable, and the British Government would do him no injustice if it reserved to itself for the present the right to a refo upon his nomination of a minister."

A writer in the Bombay Times takes a view of the question somewhat favourable to the Nizam.

"It is all very well," he says, "talking of reductions, and the necessity which exists (for the Nizam) of commencing the cutting system at home, by disbanding his rabble troops, and reforming his household establishment; but we humbly conceive that when one of the oldest allies of the British power in India is involved, partly by forced loans, and in a great measure by his own imprudence, vacillation, and want of firmness, in almost inextricable difficulties, it behoves us to exhibit a more generous line of policy; and instead of proceeding at once to coerce him, it would be wiser to set him an example of what can and ought to be done in the present crisis of his affairs. It is said that the Nizam has been called upon peremptorily to pay the accumulated and accumulating debt due to the Company's treasury. The Resident is aware that he has not the means of paying it—we therefore argue that, instead of resorting to the insulting threat of depriving him of one of the fairest portions of his territory, the long-coveted Berar, it would be much more in unison with British feeling to treat him with that forbearance with which, as an old faithful ally, he deserves to be treated: we say, prolong the date of payment, and in the mean time let us set him the example of retrenchment—abolish useless and expensive appointments as vacancies may occur in his contingent, and thus prove to him that, whilst we are willing and earnest to do everything in our power to extricate him from his difficulties, it is expected, and can then be fairly insisted upon, that he will himself lend a hand to the task of promoting the object in view, without which the wished for result can never be attained."

Meanwhile, a mutiny of the Khas Rissalah had broken out, and they had proceeded to the length of asking to be paid up and discharged. "A leading member amongst them observed, that they were driven to desperation; that nothing was left them but to describe their condition to the Resident; and if no alleviation of their miseries was afforded them, they had no alternative but to subsist by plundering."

The kingdom of Oude seems to be in not much better condition than the Nizam's state. A letter from Lucknow, published in the Englishman, gives the following particulars of a brush with a zemindar:—

"Capt. Barlow's regiment was sent after the Bhetiah zemindar, Raja Thakoopersad. The Resident has never ceased urging on the Oude Government the necessity of punishing this daring offender, and accordingly Capt. Barlow's corps received orders months ago to try and catch him. The Raja fled into a jungle almost impenetrable, and well defended by his followers. The King's troops were loth to pursue by forced marches a chief whose men had sworn to defend him with their lives, and who was well informed of all the movements of the corps sent to take him. Capt. Hearsey, commanding a police detachment of 350 men, has however baffled Thakoopersad's vigilance, and attacked and defeated him, killing about fifty of the enemy, among whom were some of the principal leaders, with a comparatively trifling loss. Many bodies were thrown into the river, and twenty-five heads sent into Lucknow, as a proof of success. To Col. Sleeman's energetic measures we shall yet owe much towards rooting out these freebooters."

Another letter says that the rebels were taken by surprise, and that forty men and women were killed. "Twenty-four of the Newab's men were killed and wounded, and a nephew of Gunga Bux was wounded and taken prisoner; from him it was learned that Thakoopersad, Gunga Bux's brother, was the only one of the family who had escaped. In the fight, two of the Company's sepoys were killed, and four wounded. Messrs. Barlow and Hearsey sent twenty-four heads to the king, who had two stuck up at each thannah. In the fight, Ragonath Sing, general of Gunga Bux's forces, was killed. Of the twenty-four heads sent to the king, one was Ragonath Sing's, and all the rest belonged to the family, male and female, of Gunga Bux."

We make no comment upon these statements, which may not be strictly accurate.

The Delhi Gazette mentions some trifling disturbances at Kerowlee, to quell which, Lieut. M. Mason, the political officer in charge, had moved up troops to the scene of action, and states that it was not improbable that a regiment might be called for from Agra.

The Afreedies had again closed the Kohat Pass, and cut off the communications betwixt Kohat and Peshawur. It appears that, although they allowed the 1st Punjab Cavalry to pass through the defile unharmed to Kohat (not "without arms," as misunderstood by the journals), the march was effected by stratagem, and the precise day for marching kept strictly secret. "When it is considered," observes the Delhi Gazette, "that even the indirect route can be as readily closed by the Afreedies as the direct route, the position of our unfortunate troops is far from enviable."

The Governor-General had abandoned his intention of visiting Cashmere. The reason publicly assigned is the apprehension that the climate of the valley might not suit his Lordship's state of health. The Bengal Hurkaru observes:—"It has lately transpired that Sir Henry Lawrence, when in Cashmere, offered 'advice' to Maharajah Goolab Singh on certain points in which his administration inflicted hardship and wrong upon his subjects; whether his Highness has acted on this friendly counsel does not appear; but the fact of his having left one of the deputies complained of by Sir Henry Lawrence a member of a triumvirate to which the Government was delegated when he went to meet Lord Dalhousie, would suggest the inference that he had not shown much respect for the 'advice' offered. Possibly there may be political as well as medical reasons for the noble Marquess's declining an invitation to visit the Happy Valley." The Lahore Chronicle asserts that "want of time is the sole ground on which the return visit to Maharaja Goolab Sing is not to take place."

His lordship is said to have remained some time in the neighbourhood of Kalabagh, a region as remarkable for its mineral wealth as for its romantic beauty. Some striking discoveries by the antiquarian portion of the party, bearing on the accounts we possess of the movements of Alexander the Great, are said to have been made. It was supposed that, at the date of the last advices, he had reached Peshawur.

The Commander-in-Chief arrived at Bhurtpore on the 15th February, and remained there until the 17th. He was received and entertained by the Rajah with great distinction. His Excellency was expected at Meerut on the 26th.

The Nepaulese ambassador, Jung Bahadoor, has been received with great state in his own country. The whole population of the valley received orders from the Maharajah to turn out and meet him and his new wife, the daughter of the Rajah of Coorg, on their arrival at Katmandoo. He has already arranged for the construction of a grand road from the capital to the frontier—the first-fruits of his visit to Europe. It has been found impossible, however, to obtain permission for Dr. Hooker to travel in Nepal.

Accounts from Indore state that young Holkar had made a tour to Upper India, the first instance of a young native chief making a tour with a tutor, before coming of age, for the purpose of acquiring knowledge. The young chief was attended by his preceptor, Omeid Singh, who had charge of the party, to whom all respect and honour had been directed by the Governor-General and the Resident to be paid in the different states they might visit on their tour: this the young prince, however, declined, preferring to travel as a private gentleman. The party consisted of a dozen or more, the brother and three of the prince's class companions forming a portion. They travelled on horseback, and visited Kotah, Bhurtpore, Agra, Muttra, Meerut, Saharanpore, Hurdwar, Roorkee, Tanasir, Delhi, Ajmere, Jeypore, &c., and returned to Banpore on the 18th. The young prince constantly communicated with the female portion of his family during his absence.

The trial of Jotee Pershaud was to take place on the 24th February. A jury is to aid the judge in trying the case.

The Governor-General had issued an order for the return to regimental duty of all those military officers in staff employ who have failed to pass an examination in Hindustani, thus fulfilling the threat held out in G. O. of the 25th June last.

The affairs of the North-Western Bank were still in confusion. The News and Notes, a new Calcutta journal, states:—

"A Court of Inquiry is sitting on Captains Blois and Watt and Major Angelo, for the part they have taken in the affairs of the North-Western Bank. Major Angelo is in orders for two years' leave of absence on sick certificate. Capt. Watt has given notice of an action of libel against two journals. Capt. Blois did the same some time ago; but we have not heard that proceedings are going on. There has been a meeting of the shareholders at Meerut for the purpose of considering whether they would apply for registration under Act XLIII. of 1850. From what passed, it appeared that there were many loans now open on the hypothecation of the bank's own shares; that some of its servants were indebted to the institution; and that there was a deficit of assets of upwards of 40,000l. The meeting were at a loss to know whether, under these circumstances, they were in a position to apply for registration, and were guilty of the absurdity of determining to apply to the Secretary to the Government of India for a construction of the Act! The meeting was called for the purpose of voting for registration, or otherwise, on an insufficient notice, in the face of a warning by the vice-chairman to that effect; and it met only to advertise its inability to vote, from not comprehending the Act, and the discreditable state of its affairs."

The Calcutta papers report that the preliminary operations on the railway were proceeding more satisfactorily, but the season had been nearly lost. The home authorities have sanctioned the extension of the line beyond the first short section, forward to the Burdwan collieries. Major Kennedy and Mr. Turnbull, the Government and railway engineers, had proceeded up the western bank of the river, to ascertain, by survey, whether it would not be more advisable to carry the line up the valley of the Ganges than through the hills to Mirzapore direct.

The Bombay Railway is also advancing. Messrs. Flavel and Fowler, the new contractors, were proceeding with vigour, having laid down nearly a mile of embankment along the flats from near Mahim wood in the direction of Sion; no European tools had yet been employed—the native pick, powrah, and basket, being found to suffice. Mr. Balston was proceeding rapidly from the opposite side of Sion marsh, and would have the embankment across before the rains (June). This portion of the work admits of the wheelbarrow, the dohbin-cart, and railway waggon, and some extent of rails have accordingly been laid down by them.

Passed for high proficiency in Persian and Oordoo 1st May, 1850; for degrees of honour in Persian and Oordoo 2nd Sept. 1850; for high proficiency in Hindee 1st Oct. 1850. Passed for the service in Bengalee 1st Nov., and on 1st Dec. 1850, received certificate in Sanskrit, with prize of Rs. 800. Studying for honours.

LAW.

The case of a Mr. Arrathoon, an Armenian, against whom certain writs were in the hands of the sheriff, and who was violently removed from the French settlement of Chandernagore, has occupied a good deal of attention. Mr. Arrathoon's statement is to the effect that he was walking close by the river, when he was seized and dragged on board a boat, near to which was another with the sheriff's officer on board, who immediately arrested him upon a writ issued by Messrs. Shearwood and Co., the cabinet-makers of Calcutta, who have a manufactory at Chandernagore. Mr. Arrathoon believed that a Mr. Taylor, one of their assistants, led this attack upon him. Mr. Taylor however has made an affidavit that he was in Calcutta at the time. The counter-statement put forth was that no force was used, that Mr. Arrathoon was entrapped on board under the impression that he was to meet a woman. The sheriff's officer admits he was told that if he would be in the neighbourhood he might have an opportunity of serving his writ; that he waited some time and then left, and that when he was a mile and a half away from Chandernagore, returning to Calcutta, a boat came alongside with Mr. Arrathoon on board, who called out for help, and complained he had been taken away by force, and otherwise ill-treated. The writ was then executed, and the prisoner was lodged in jail. Evidence was taken of what had occurred at Chandernagore by the authorities there, and a strong remonstrance was forwarded to the Deputy-Governor of Bengal. Mr. Arrathoon's deposition was taken on oath at the jail by the Chief Magistrate, and thereupon the Advocate-general applied for and obtained a writ of habeas corpus. The prisoner was brought up with the further return that he was detained under a certain writ, &c. The legality of the arrest and detention was fully argued, and the following is the written judgment of the Court, delivered by the Chief Justice, Sir Lawrence Peel:—

"This case is one of great importance, as well on account of the interests involved in it, as the principles on which it has been argued. The Advocate-general contends that as it appears on the facts that the capture was in Chandernagore, in the territory of the French republic, and was effected by violence there, this Court ought, upon the general principles of international law, to consider the defendant in the cause as still constructively within the territory whence he was removed, and to afford him the opportunity of actually replacing himself within the territory of the state the laws of which have been violated by his arrest. No authority was cited for this position, and we are not disposed to give our assent to the argument. It is not necessary to decide this case upon that ground, and we forbear from expressing a decided opinion upon it, which we prefer to reserve until a case arises which calls for its expression. This constructive inhabitancy is undoubtedly recognized by the law of nations in certain cases; but the very case quoted by the Advocate-general rather disaffirms than affirms the general principle contended for. The principle itself was not advanced, and the case was discussed both at the bar and by the court on the distinction between a detention for a crime and a detention for a debt, or the like civil liability where the first capture has been illegal. Lord Tenterden's observation that the foreign state must vindicate the majesty of its own laws by punishing there those who infringe them, seems to imply that the consideration of the question whether the laws of a foreign state had been violated by the capture, bore only on the legality of the arrest. It does not belong to a court of justice to arrange matters of so much delicacy. No state can effectively control by precedent measures all the wanton and illegal acts of its own subjects, and it must be left to the executive Government to take all becoming measures to show that it respects the rights of states in amity with it, and will not suffer steps to be taken which may interrupt that amity, where it has legally the power to prevent them, or to punish them when committed.

We, however, can only act in this, as in other cases, on the principles of our own laws. We have not the power to extend them. The Advocate-general intervened originally, as he had an undoubted right to do, to ask for a habeas corpus to bring the party imprisoned before the court, on a suggestion of illegal imprisonment. This writ is of such value in guarding the personal freedom of the subject, that every reasonable encouragement is given to such suggestions. Any person can, in a proper mode, communicate facts to the court to show that an illegal imprisonment is being suffered by one whom it has the power to release; and if that illegality is committed in the abuse of civil process, the rights of creditors will not prevent such intervention, since they of course have no right dependent on any abuse of process. The motion for the discharge of Arratoon is made with his concurrence, and the proceeding is strictly regular. The facts come before us in a mode little favourable to the discovery of the entire truth. There is no power of procuring evidence which parties are not willing to give, and it is difficult to judge as to the truth of facts on conflicting affidavits. If those with whom the institution of prosecution lies, should think it right to carry this matter further, then, before another tribunal, more light will probably be thrown on some parts of this disgraceful transaction than is now afforded to us. It is well that it should be known that no British subject at least can take part in such an outrage on the rights of another nation in these parts as is stated to have occurred, without rendering himself liable to be indicted for the act in this court, since it is also a crime by our law, and he is indictable though the act be committed within the territories of a foreign European power. The statute 26 Geo. 3, c. 57, s. 29, extends to all such offences committed by her Majesty's subjects or the servants of the East-India Company resident in India, within the geographical limits of the exclusive trade of the East-India Company, whether perpetrated against any of her Majesty's subjects or against other persons. This provision includes as well the states of foreign European as of foreign native powers. An illegal arrest and imprisonment, if committed by one of her Majesty's subjects, or by a servant of the Hon. Company, at Chandernagore, is indictable in her Majesty's court here, for to those courts alone that jurisdiction is confined by that act, and by the general principles of our law; those who at Calcutta advised or promoted it would be also indictable, as would also any person elsewhere instigating or aiding it, who might be subject, by reason of his peculiar origin or status, to the jurisdiction of the court.

We shall decide this case entirely on the principles on which our Superior Courts act in relieving against abuse of process. The illegality of the first capture in such cases is not alone to be considered: it must be considered also whether the Sheriff constructively, through his inferior officers, is a party to that illegality. He that ratifies an illegal act, done for his use or benefit, may be treated as if originally directing it; and therefore the collusion of the officer of the Sheriff in an illegal act of capture preceding the actual arrest, will render his capture also illegal. As the Sheriff is supposed by law to seize at once under all the civil process which is then in his office, the illegality pervades the first arrest and the detention under all such process. But writs subsequently delivered to the Sheriff stand upon a different footing. With us, however, there is this limitation, as ours is not a court of general jurisdiction, as the Superior Courts at Westminster are: — it is necessary, before any writ issues, by our practice, to lay a ground of jurisdiction, and it has been properly decided that a forced detention under an illegal arrest, in the great gaol of Calcutta, does not constitute jurisdiction, on the ground of inhabitancy. Subsequent process, therefore, where a plaint has been recently filed, may be inapplicable here for the detention of one illegally arrested, though it be sued out without any complicity, direct or indirect, in the first taking. Although several of the facts are involved in doubt, others are sufficiently clear. We have no doubt of the truth of that part of Arratoon's statement which alleges that he was taken violently from Chandernagore. It is highly probable that that part of his story is exaggerated, but some violence he certainly appears to have endured. The statement as to the position of Thornton's boat appears to us to be untrue. We cannot excuse it on the ground suggested, that Arratoon may have been confused at the time, and have had but an imperfect recollection. It rather appears that he has fallen into that common and dangerous practice, foolish as well as wicked, of trying to improve a case in the main a good one by the addition of falsehood. We have, however, not the least doubt that he was taken away by force from Chandernagore for the express purpose of being arrested by Thornton, under the writ of this Court. Thornton has denied all participation, direct or indirect, in what took place at Chandernagore. This is a sufficient denial of criminality. The question of collusion will be afterwards considered. We see no ground to doubt the truth of that denial. He appears to be an officer who has conducted himself well, and it is probable that those who meant to perpetrate this act, so far understood what they were about as not to make needless and dangerous disclosures.

Why should they have taken pains to defeat their object by informing Thornton beforehand that violence was to be used — information which could have been of no service to them or to him, but which might, and probably would, have been destructive of their whole design? Indeed, it is perfectly consistent with the facts that stratagem may have been originally intended, and violence only resorted to when the other was thought to offer no prospect of success. Still, though on this evidence we acquit Thornton of what would indeed have been a grave charge, and would have rendered him liable to criminal procedure, it is still our opinion that the legality of the arrest is dependent, under the circumstances of this case, on the legality of the first actual capture, and must stand or fall with it. In explaining the view that we take of the case on this point, it is necessary to remark at some length on the evidence. Arratoon was living at Chandernagore, a place totally exempt of course from the sheriff's entrance as sheriff. It was no duty of Thornton to watch Arratoon there; though had he been apprised that Arratoon was within his reach, and had neglected to arrest him, the sheriff would have been liable for that neglect. Thornton is informed by one, an entire stranger to him, whom he describes as a Portuguese Christian, that if he had the power to arrest Arratoon, and would be near Chandernagore on the river at a certain time, he would have the means of effecting a capture. Thornton does not appear to have asked this person who sent him, or as to the means to be employed to bring Arratoon within his reach. By his assenting to aid in the capture, he placed himself in connexion with those undisclosed persons who engaged for conducting Arratoon to him. The communication implied, not merely that Arratoon would be casually at such a place at such a time, but that means would be taken to bring him there; and Thornton admits that he thought stratagem would be employed. But although he meant to act on a successful stratagem, that complicity would not implicate him in acts of violence. The evidence, however, as to his share in a subsequent stage of the transaction, satisfies us that with the means of knowledge within his reach, he chose, at the very time of capture, to remain in that state of ignorance, if ignorance there was, which can only be ascribed to a determination to see or hear nothing inconvenient to be known. When the boat approached him, he admits that Arratoon cried out to him for help. He admits that Arratoon complained of violence, and that his coat was torn. What was the conduct of the captors? Instead of exulting in the success of a mere trick, they decamp immediately, taking Thornton's boat without remonstrance from him, and he without inquiry or remonstrance takes charge of his prisoner, professing to act on an improbable story that Arratoon, at that time of the day was lured into the boat in which an European, a stranger to him, was in prosecution of an adventure of a very different kind. On the whole, the evidence establishes to our satisfaction that Thornton was determined, in his zeal as a sheriff's officer, to effect a capture, and determined to be blind and credulous. This is, in our opinion, collusion. It is the adoption — the ratification of an act with full means of knowledge of its real character present to his eyes and understanding, which if he willfully closed, he cannot get rid of the ratification on the plea of ignorance. It is plain that Arratoon was mistaken in attributing any part in this transaction to Mr. Taylor. His affidavit is satisfactory on that point. But we are not satisfied with the absence of any affidavit on the part of the plaintiffs, except the mere denial of Mr. Taylor that he was at Chandernagore, and acting in the arrest. It appears plainly that some European was an actor in it; and as the plaintiffs have an establishment there, it is probable that some European connected with them was there; no third person is likely to have originated or taken part in an arrest on their writ, as a merely officious act of his own; and as the sheriff's officer shows that the act at Chandernagore did not originate with him, there is no avoiding the inference that some such person connected with the plaintiffs as the description points to, took part in the act. They ought not to complain if a wrong suspicion is entertained, who have taken no pains to relieve themselves from it.

It is much to be regretted that persons will not reflect on the danger attendant on any violation of the law. The forcible illegal restraint has often led to bloodshed and loss of life. What if resistance had been offered at Chandernagore, and blood had been shed? It is not surprising that the authorities there should witness such acts with serious displeasure. This Court will always visit any abuse that comes to its knowledge with its marked displeasure, and particularly the abuse of meane process of arrest of the person for debt—a process liable to be abused. We can act only on evidence, and if the parties who suffer from any abuse will not bring their cases before us in a form in which we can give them relief, they have themselves only to blame if they continue to suffer wrong. The defendant must be discharged from custody at the suit of the plaintiffs in this action, and from detention under the other writs in the sheriff's office at the date of his capture under the plaintiffs' writ. Seton has not had notice of this, and the arrest under his writ was subsequent. The prisoner must be remanded, and notice given to Seton of the renewal of this motion for the discharge of Arratoon, when any objection can be urged as well to the original capture as to the particular process, which the facts before the Court will warrant. The affidavits already filed can be used, and such additional ones as may be deemed advisable.

It is not my practice to notice from this place anything which I observe in the public prints; but I shall so far deviate from my practice as to observe to the defendant that the Court expects at least from suitors and their legal advisers information of any prevalent abuse; and that whilst Mr. Arratoon's case is pending before the Court, he would better advance his own cause by bringing in a regular way to our notice anything respecting the debts on which he has been taken, which, in his opinion, renders the issue of a capias against him a wrong by his creditor, than by writing on the subject himself in the newspapers whilst the subject of his arrest is yet before us.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE BISHOP OF CALCUTTA landed at Singapore on the 11th of January.

DEATH OF LIEUT. R. H. GENNYS.—In our obituary of yesterday we recorded the death, from abscess of the liver, of Lieut. R. H. Gennys, 44th N.I. This most promising young officer died at Midnapore, where he had proceeded on duties connected with his appointment as assistant to the superintendent for the suppression of Thuggee. Entering the service in 1839, he very soon made himself conspicuous as a thorough good officer, and received the appointment of adjutant of his corps. During the first Sheik campaign he was with his regiment, which formed a portion of Sir John Littler's division, and on the death in action at Ferozeshahr of that general's A. D. C., he immediately requested the officer commanding the 44th to place Lieut. Gennys at his disposal for the purpose of acting on his staff. After sharing in the operation against Kote Kangra under General Wheeler, Lieut. Gennys accompanied his regiment to their cantonments, and on its arrival at Barrackpore in 1850 was about to proceed on furlough, when he was selected by Sir John Littler to fill the vacant appointment of assistant to the general superintendent for the suppression of Thuggee for Moorsheadabad and the lower districts, in carrying out the duties connected with which, he has unfortunately been cut off in the flower of a manhood which was full of promise. His loss is severely felt by his brother officers and a large circle of friends.—Englishman, Jan. 31.

COLONEL PEW, late of the Bengal Artillery, died at Singapore on the 2nd of February, on his way to Australia for the benefit of his health. Sick, and poor, and aged, this prince of military speculators may be regarded as having been happily released in the extremity of his adversity and disgrace. Above forty years a member of the Bengal army, he had seen a large amount of service, and was at one time in the possession of wealth which in those days might well be deemed enormous. In 1845, he is said to have been worth 250,000*l*. But he was not content with this, or satisfied with the position, high standing, and a distinguished service secured; he must meddle with trade, and embark in the wildest speculations. He was a prey to adventurers of temperament as sanguine and reckless as his own, but with much less abundant means at their command; and not only did his own wealth in a few years make to itself wings and fly away, but through the indiscretion, not to say dishonesty, of friends and coadjutors, he was able to give wings to the wealth of others. His adventures proved fatal to the Benares Bank, and the ruin of his own character and circumstances.—Bombay Times.

BALLOONS.—The Deputy Governor of Bengal has refused permission to Mr. Kight, the aeronaut, to ascend in his balloon from the Esplanade, lest he should fall and hurt himself.

THE EXPRESS, with the London Mail of January the 7th, arrived at Calcutta early on the morning of the 13th February, in thirty-seven days.

COURT MARTIAL ON CAPTAIN HASELL.—The sentence of the Court Martial on Captain Hasell, of the 48th N.I., has been returned for revision, as not being in accordance with the Articles of War.—Mofussilite, Feb. 4.

THE MACAULAY CODE.—We believe it may be taken for granted, that the Macaulay code will be adopted before long, throughout the territories subject to the East-India Company. The want of an harmonious body of laws becomes daily more pressing, and though the system to which the great historian has given his name, may be open to many objections, it will put an end to the monstrous contradictions which prevail at this moment in the administration of criminal justice. The suspension of the Black Acts, which has been set down as a concession to the popular feeling, is solely attributable to the defective state of Indian jurisprudence. The Court of Directors were quite ready to subject Europeans to the authority of Company's courts, but it was discovered that no laws existed by which they could be tried in them. We shall be much mistaken, if the code and the Black Acts are not both in full operation, long before the expiration of the charter.—Delhi Gazette, Feb. 22.

THE LAHORE PRIZE PROPERTY.—A letter from Lahore mentions that the great sale of confiscated property, which was to have commenced on the 10th February, was postponed till the 12th, no European guard having been available on the former day. Besides a long catalogue of diamonds, pearls, rubies, &c., there are diamond-hilted swords and daggers, marriage veils, head ornaments, torahs, rings innumerable. Even bridles and cruppers are set with precious stones, and in a single lot is a diamond of Shah Jehangeer's, weighing 91 ruttees. This is equal to 42 carats, and if a stone of fine water, is according to ordinary estimation worth several thousand pounds. There is another about the same weight, and very many of large size, though not equal to these. There is a Bajoorwand, once the property of Imut Shah, the founder of the Doodraanee empire, a dagger which belonged to Lord Auckland's unfortunate protégé, Shah Soojaoool-Moolk, another which once belonged to Nadir Shah, a sword of Runjeet Sing's, and many other weapons and ornaments, once the property of historical personages. We doubt whether so many diamonds were ever sold on any occasion, and as for rubies, pearls, emeralds, topazes, turquoise, &c., they are innumerable. It may be thought that the means of the purchasers are hardly sufficient to do justice to such a collection, but we are informed that an excellent sale is expected, in consequence of the immense numbers of wealthy natives and vakeels of native courts who have flocked into Lahore from all the neighbouring states and provinces. It is expected that the sale will turn out as well for government as the late Scinde sale did.—Englishman, Feb. 17.

A letter from Lahore, dated Feb. 16, says:—"The auction sale of the confiscated property commenced on the 15th inst. A diamond, which was bought by the late Koonwur Nounahal Sing for Rs. 63,000, was sold at the auction for Rs. 10,000. The person who came from Calcutta purchased it. Other jewels and valuables were also sold cheap. Lalla Chunder Bhan, the Vakeel of the Nawab of Bahawalpore, bought about Rs. 50,000 worth of things at the auction, such as swords inlaid with diamonds, daggers, pearl necklaces, &c., and has received orders from his master to buy as much more."

COMMISSARIAT FRAUDS.—Jotee Pershaud, Choty Lal, his Agra agent, Shunkurdoss, his Loodiana agent, and Hailal Mahajun of Agra, were committed for trial on the 8th instant in three several cases. Jotee Pershaud is arraigned on about twenty-three charges, of obtaining money under false pretences, fraud, and subornation of perjury. These trials do not include the cases of Bareilly and Bijnore, which are separately under preparation by Mr. Wylly, joint-magistrate of Bareilly. The trial has been fixed for Monday the 24th, before the sessions court at Agra.—Delhi Gaz. Feb. 22.

CHURCHES AT LAHORE.—Lahore has been in the actual post session of the British Government for nearly two years, and virtually for close upon five. There are and have been for some time past 200 and more British civil and military officers residing at Lahore with their families. There have been from 1,200 to 2,000 European soldiers at this station, of whom at least one-half belonged to the Church of England. There are more than 100 Europeans either attached to public or to private offices and establishments at this place. The European population is daily increasing, and will continue to increase, and yet there is no Protestant church at Lahore, and it seems very probable that there will soon be no place of worship for the Protestant portion of the community. The Roman Catholics of the place have had two chapels for some time past.—Lahore Chron. Jan. 29.

THE ARMENIANS IN INDIA.—At a visit of Sir W. Burton, one of the Supreme Court of Madras, to the Armenian Philanthropic Academy, at this presidency, the rector, Mr. Johannes Avdall, presented an address to him, in which occurs the following magnificent paragraph:—"Descendants of the great and invincible Haic, of the renowned and heroic Tigranes, whose names strike a chord that thrills in every Armenian's heart—scions of the most powerful Arsacidæ, under whose sway the whole of Asia once trembled—fugitives from a land where the will of one single man is the universal law of the country, where the dogma of the pseudo apostle of Arabia is the Magna Charta of the people, where the exile is home-persecuted by a Government under which despotism is liberty, bigotry is religious toleration, and anarchy and misrule are constitutional monarchy and rule—the Armenians were once necessitated to come round to India long before Vasco de Gama had doubled the Cape of Good Hope, long before any sect of Christian emigrants colonized any part of the country, and consequently long before the existence or formation of the Hon. East-India Company! Go to Central Asia, go to Cabul, to Agra, to Surat, to Burmah, to the islands of the Indian Archipelago, and you are sure to meet with marks of Armenian industry, sure to meet with memorials of Armenian commerce, with vestiges of Armenian enterprise!"

CAPT. JOHNSTON.—Capt. Johnston, who has for so many years held the important post of comptroller of Government steam-vessels, is at length constrained to retire from his appointment to the enjoyment of rest and tranquillity in England. He has claims on the gratitude of the public for services performed to the country, which it would be an act of injustice in us to forget, more especially on the occasion of his bidding adieu to India. It is to him that we are indebted for the first steamer between England and India. It was Captain Johnston who navigated the first steam-vessel to the port of Calcutta, in the year 1825; and perhaps there may be some among us still who can remember how strong was the feeling of ecstasy with which the appearance of this vessel among us was hailed, and how completely it seemed to break up that dreary feeling of exile from our native land and its associations which weighed down the spirits, when the shortest period in which an answer could be received from home to any communication was eight months. Subsequently to that event, Capt. Johnston was employed by Lord W. Bentinck in ascertaining the feasibility of navigating our rivers by steamers, and to his investigations and labours is the country indebted for the steam-vessels which have now been employed for sixteen years between Calcutta and Allahabad, and have contributed so materially to the comfort and convenience of the community in India. It is in reference to these circumstances that the name of Capt. Johnston will long continue to be held in grateful remembrance among us. — Friend of India, Feb. 13.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF arrived at Bhurtpore on the 15th Feb., and was to have halted there on the 16th and 17th. The weather had been very unsettled, and on Thursday afternoon the camp was visited by a violent thunder storm. The hailstones exceeded in magnitude any within the remembrance of that universal referee, "the oldest inhabitant"—they were considerably larger than pigeons' eggs, and had projecting spikes, which gave them something of the appearance of diminutive caltrops. On Friday morning Sir William was met near Benehra, by a detachment of the Rajah's hunting leopards, and his Excellency and retinue having proceeded with them to the hunting ground, the cheetahs pursued and pulled down divers bucks and other deer, for the amusement of the ladies and gentlemen present. On Saturday morning the Rajah went out, attended by his suite in their gala dresses, to meet the Commander-in-Chief, on whom the officers and staff were in attendance; and the two great men proceeded together on the Rajah's elephant to the camp. In the afternoon his Highness paid a state visit to the Commander-in-Chief. We are told that great alterations and improvements are being made in and about the town of Bhurtpore. The principal street, leading from the Agra gate to the Kombheer gate, is being made of uniform width, and the new fronts of the houses set off with facings of stone, carved and ornamented to the utmost of the mason's skill. This street and the roads for some distance outside of the two gates are metalled. As a symptom of pacific times, shrubs and weeds have been suffered to spring up in the ditch and from the scarp of the town wall, whilst the works which covered the gates have been cut through, to open the new roads, and as defences, demolished. The belt of forest, celebrated in sporting history, which formerly encircled Bhurtpore, is fast disappearing: the ruling powers of the territory having discovered, no doubt, that it is more profitable to the state and advantageous to the people, to have the town surrounded by rich fields of grain instead of an uncultivated jungle occupied alone by deer, wild hog, &c. — Delhi Gazette.

THE HEAD QUARTERS of H.M. 18th Foot (Royal Irish) marched into Fort William on the morning of the 13th February.

THE WEATHER, though complained of in the upper provinces, has here been highly favourable to the planters, enabling many of them to sow largely in this the most favourable month of the year. As, however, there is always something in the way of agriculturists, they complain bitterly of the scarcity of seed, as interfering with their otherwise splendid prospects.

THE MILITARY COMMISSION.—It has transpired, that the Commander-in-Chief is not well satisfied with the composition of the committee for revising the code of regulations for the army.

DR. MARRIOTT.—The Bishop of Calcutta has declined to adopt ecclesiastical proceedings against the Rev. Dr. Marriott, and the Government of the N. W. Provinces has, we believe, regretted his lordship's determination. The reverend gentleman has, however, been ordered to Dinapore. — Delhi Gaz., Feb. 22.

LITTLE DULKEP SING has eaten—let thunder roll—a piece of beef, or something of that kind, and lost caste. The young Maharajah, watching the opportunity of his guardian, Dr. Logan's absence, deliberately and of malice prepense, has eaten something which defiles him for ever in the eyes of the Sikh. He can never touch the sacred Grunt again; most, if not all, of his Sikh followers have left him on this awful occasion, except his gooroo, who, afraid of the wrath of his countrymen, dares not leave, as he believes they would wreak their vengeance on his head, whether to blame or not. Government is in an agony to know the effect of this breach of the Grunt's commandments amongst the Sikhs, and a close watch is now established to observe whether the Sikh nation are inclined to believe that the crime committed has been the result of a deep policy on the part of the British or not. Should they decide against us, the army must be increased, more regiments sent for from England, and preparations made on the grandest scale to meet this awful emergency. The eccentricities of the young Maharajah will prove a source of serious alarm to the Government, if the Sikhs consider him in anywise bound up with their hopes of future independence. The boy is very clever, but decidedly original in his way of thinking. We have given an account of one freak and now have to chronicle another. He wishes to know how he can be made a Christian, and has expressed great alarm at the idea, that Mr. Thomason intends to examine him in English, with a view of testing his proficiency. In order to avoid this evil, he prayed to God, he says, for two nights, that he might die, but finding his request unheeded, he has made up his mind to commit suicide by eating green peas; an immoderate quantity will, he expects, prove fatal. — Delhi Gazette, Feb. 22.

ASIATIC SOCIETY.—The following is an extract from the Council of the Asiatic Society's annual report, showing the state of the society's affairs during the past year:—"At the close of the year 1849, the number of members was 144, since which period 10 new members have been selected and admitted, and 14 have returned from Europe, making a total of 24 members added to the society during the past year. On the other hand, the society have to regret the death of 4 members, and the loss of 15 by withdrawal, and that of 7 others by departure to Europe. Thus, at the close of 1850, the number of members actually in India and subscribing amounts to 142. The council cannot quit this subject without regretting that, whilst in the year 1847-48, there was a steady increase in the list of members, and the number of elections amounted to 48 and 32 respectively, in the year 1850 there have been only 10 elections, and amongst them the name of no native gentleman appears. The council feel assured that the support of the learned and of the scientific will not be withheld from an institution which for a period of 67 years has steadily carried out the designs of its illustrious founder, and has greatly advanced the cause of science and oriental literature, and deservedly enjoys the high reputation which all Europe has thankfully and cheerfully accorded."

THE TURF IN INDIA.—The magnificent humbug, who not long ago splendidly threw his baton further than he could recover it, in an excellent parting address to the army, has been unjust to the turf. He speaks of the facility of obtaining money afforded by the banks, as "encouraging those vices which are the most mischievous, especially racing, a vice always accompanied by gambling and extravagance." This is not true. There are many, very many, who love the turf, who are on it or who support it, and who are never guilty of any gambling whatever. It is a pity the oburgation was not confined to card and billiard playing and extravagant living,—a greater pity, that opportunities for making public examples of confirmed gamblers have been disregarded on the most frivolous pretences. — Cal. Sporting Review.

COPPER CURRENCY.—The Court of Directors are anxious to introduce a copper currency into this presidency, of smaller value than the pice. At present, the small purchases of the poorer classes are made in cowries, which are subject to great fluctuation. At one period they can obtain 160 cowries for a pice, at another only 100. The subject has long been before Government, and in the year 1835, a copper coinage of the value of a pie, or the one-twelfth of an anna pice, was struck, but this division of money is of English origin, and altogether foreign to the habits of the people; the coin has therefore never become popular, and has fallen into complete disuse. The Court of Directors have strongly recommended the issue of a coinage of the value of half a pice. Such a coin will be in the highest degree acceptable to the whole native population, it will even be received with feelings of gratitude. It will enable them to dispense in a great measure with the use of cowries in their daily dealings, and relieve them from the impositions to which the use of those shells subjects them. On the other hand, it will be one of the most interesting and profitable undertakings of Government. While the seignorage on gold coin in the Calcutta Mint is one per cent., and that on silver two per cent., the seignorage on copper coinage is calculated at not less than sixteen per cent. The report on the civil charges of the Lower Provinces, sent in to Lord Ellenborough in 1844, informs us that the "Government gain, consisting of the difference between the invoice price of copper and its value as coin, during these thirteen years, was twenty-five lacs of rupees." The introduction of this coin of a moiety of a pice, will, therefore, not only promote in the highest degree the convenience of the people at large, but also assist the financial interests of Government.—Friend of India.

WRESTLING-MATCH.—On Sunday, the 19th inst., a display of wrestling took place at the Seven Tanks, the country-house of Frankissen Mullick and his brothers, being one of a series of similar exhibitions got up by these Baboos, wherein professed wrestlers contend for prizes. The crowd of natives outside the barriers, and on the walls and trees, was tremendous; and there were, perhaps, about 500 persons of better sort within the barriers, including some European gentlemen of the civil, military, mercantile, and legal professions. The Mahomedan champion stood about 5 feet 7 inches, and might weigh about 12 stone. On "peeling," he showed great development of chest and limbs. His adversary was full a couple of inches taller, and a stone more in weight. In spite of these advantages against him, the Mahomedan seemed to be the favourite. On being called, the two champions uncovered, and advanced briskly towards each other from opposite corners of the inner barrier, with heads and arms protruded, and legs kept well back. After a short skirmish for the grig, the Moslem seized his opponent's right arm about the wrist, and brought it under his own right arm-pit. Their position then was—the Moslem on the left side, and a little in front of his adversary, holding his right arm with both hands; the Hindoo on his opponent's right, and a little behind, with his arm round his adversary's waist, and his right arm forced across his own body, and carried under his adversary's arm-pit, where it was held "in chancery." When the Moslem had, with admirable coolness and patience, satisfied himself that he had his opponent's arm in safe custody, he suddenly, and with great force, struck back his right leg, thereby sending the Hindoo's left leg high up into the air; at the same time he jerked the arm in chancery. The Hindoo fell forward, and as he came down, the twist on the arm brought his back on the ground, his adversary falling over him. The shock partially separated them. The Hindoo attempted to recover himself, and the Moslem showed himself equally ready to pin him down; but the friends interfered, and separated the combatants, as the victory already belonged to the Moslem, according to the rules of Indian wrestling, which require that the back must touch the ground to constitute a fall, but that the slightest contact is decisive of the question. The interest taken by the spectators seemed of the warmest nature, and the cheering at the result of this match was tremendous.—Englishman, Jan. 29.

BANK OF BENGAL.—Mr. Charles Hogg, the secretary of the Bank of Bengal, is compelled by failing health to return to Europe. Many candidates are in the field for the appointment which will thus be vacated. The following names are on the list:—Mr. J. B. Plumb (Deputy Secretary), Mr. W. Grey, C.S., Mr. W. Maples, C.S., Mr. W. H. Smoult, Mr. C. Church, Mr. F. R. Hampton, Mr. W. J. Ilbery, Mr. J. Jenkins, Mr. C. Campbell, and Mr. R. Stopford.

CALCUTTA DOCKING COMPANY.—The fourth annual meeting of the Calcutta Docking Company was held on the 11th Feb. The report read testified to a steady and continued improvement in the prospects of the company. A dividend of 8 per cent. was declared, which is equivalent to 56 rupees per share.

MR. COLIN CAMPBELL, of the firm of Campbell and Burgett, has been appointed to audit the accounts of the Agra Bank, and to report upon the state of its affairs. The bank has declared a dividend at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum. It is said that an ensign has recently been admitted to the Board of Directors!

THE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.—The following is part of a letter from Dr. O'Shaughnessy, dated Camp, Kolakali, near Diamond Harbour, 23d January:—"The telegraph is at this moment delivering me a message from Alipore, with which it is in incessant communication from my tent on the north bank of the Hooghly, 26½ miles from Calcutta. Over these 26½ miles, the telegraph rod is buried and protected by a resinous cement as hard as stone, from Alipore to Rajhal, 15 miles—again it is buried in a coating of cloth, in six layers, saturated with pitch (mummy fashion) from Sursya to Kolakali, 5 miles; total buried 20½ miles. From Rajhal to Diamond Harbour, 12 miles, the line is being covered and buried in the same manner, at the rate of 2,000 to 3,000 feet each working-day."

THE KOHAT PASS.—The 4th Punjab Infantry, which marched from Lahore on the 25th of Dec., reached their destination at Kohat on the 7th of Feb. They proceeded along the southern base of the Salt range, from Shahpoor to Maree. At the former place they received four lacs and Rs. 80,000, and crossed the Indus at the latter, landing at Warea, about a mile from Kalabagh. The transit was effected on the 28th and 29th of Jan. with the assistance of five boats. At Gudakhel, eight miles from Kohat, the regiment were detained two days, owing to the heavy rain that fell. Our latest from Kohat, where there is now a very respectable force, is of the 12th of Feb. We are told that all was then quiet, and that Browne's corps (the 2nd Punjab Cavalry) were expected that evening, or early the next day. They were to take on treasure to the amount of two lacs Rs. 40,000 with them to Bunoo. Our correspondent speaks in high terms of the condition in which Captain Dennis's corps marched into Kohat.—Lahore Chronicle.

PROMOTION.—We understand that there are at this moment twenty-two lieutenant-colonels in the Bengal army willing to retire on the receipt of Rs. 30,000 each. It only requires Rs. 6,60,000 to give such a flip to promotion, the like of which has never yet been experienced. The ingenious author of the new scheme will calculate for you to a nicety the scale of contribution, and the ratio of individual advantage, but where is the money to come from? How is the already overburdened army to raise it, except by the sale of the Kohi Noor, and the capture of another kingdom? We hear of long lists of names in support of the latest project, but are they all paying members of the fund? and if not all, what proportion may be counted upon in the way of regular subscriptions? We fear that a dolorous answer must be given in reply. And in the interval, all promotion by voluntary retirement is stopped. No man will leave the service except for a consideration. Neither gout, hepatitis, nor length of years, are allowed to exert their proper control over the actions of our veteran officers. Every one of them has his fixed price, and will rather die in harness than forego it. We do not think the proposed plan will work except on paper. Its value is susceptible of the clearest proof in the mathematical way, but it will not stand the test of trial. Experience will soon demonstrate the impossibility of securing punctuality in paying, and nicety of action, and both are essential to the success of Young Promotion.—Delhi Gazette.

PUNJAB IRREGULAR FORCE.—The following is the present distribution of the Punjab irregular force, as recently sanctioned by Government:—

Kohat.
1st Battery	Lieut. Hay.
1st Cavalry	" Daly.
1st Infantry	Capt. Coke.
11th Infantry	" Dennis.
Hazara. (Husun Abdul.)
3rd Infantry
Bunoo.
2nd Battery	Lieut. Hammond.
2nd Cavalry	" Browne.
2nd Infantry	Capt. Walsh.
Dhera Ismaeel Khan.
5th Cavalry	Capt. Fitzgerald.
Dhera Ghazee Khan.
3rd Battery	Lieut. McNeill.
4th Cavalry	Capt. Jacob.
5th Infantry	" Gastrell.
Mithenkote.
3rd Cavalry	Capt. Prendergast.

Lahore Chronicle, Feb. 19.

EDITOR OF A LAHORE NATIVE PAPER.—We regret to have to announce the death, on the 12th inst., of Saïud Suwar-ood-deen, son of Fukeer Cheeragh-ood-deen, and grandson of Fukeer Azeez-ood-deen, the confidential adviser of Runjeet Sing. The Saïud was the principal editor of the newly-established paper, the Durcea-ee-Noor, which has already made considerable progress in public estimation, and deservedly so.—Ibid.

THE OPIUM SALE on the 10th Feb. realized as under:—

	Cheats.	Highest.	Lowest.	Average.	Proceeds.
Benares	890	865	860	861.4-2	7,66,525

This shows a fall during the last month of Rs. 50 per chest for Behar, and Rs. 48 for Benares. Nineteen boats containing opium, valued at thirteen lacs of rupees, on their way from Benares to Calcutta, were stranded at the head of the Bhageruttee river, and according to an intimation issued by the Board of Revenue, 604 of the 985 chests on board were more or less wetted, and are to be returned to Benares for examination and report. The notice goes on to say that the accident will cause no reduction, generally, in the number of chests advertised to be sold for at least the next eight sales.

THE LATE EX-PESHWA.—The East-India Company has been relieved from a heavy burden imposed upon them in 1818, by Sir John Malcolm, and borne, neither with patience nor resignation, for the long period of thirty-three years. We allude to the extravagant pension of eight lakhs per annum, enjoyed by the ex-Peshwa of the Mahrattas, Maharaja Bajee Rao. He has drawn from the coffers of the state, during the period above mentioned, the enormous sum of two kroses and 64 lakhs of Rupees, or upwards of two millions and a half sterling. With the death of Bajee Rao, the appointment of Commissioner, held by Colonel Manson for the long period of nineteen years, will cease. It was recently placed, as a temporary measure, in the hands of Mr. Morland, on Colonel Manson obtaining medical leave for a year. The charges of his office, including salary, amounted to Rs. 17,300 per annum; the reduction of this, with the pension of the Maharaja, which amounted, to be exact, to Rs. 8,66,667, will effect a saving to the state of Rs. 883,967 per annum! We observe that a correspondent of our Meerut contemporary asserts that Bajee Rao had sons and daughters. We believe this to be a mistake, as all the authorities we have consulted agree in asserting that his Highness never had any issue.—Lahore Chronicle, Feb. 8.

THE FRONTIER AT BUNOO has been strengthened by the march of the 2nd Punjab Irregular Infantry from Nuree, where it has been posted for some time, and the locality of which we indicated several months back. As it appeared necessary, however, still to keep open the communication between the northern station of Kohat and the southern ones of Bunoo and Dhera Ismail Khan, it has been determined, at the special requisition of Major R. Taylor, the deputy commissioner in those parts, to leave Capt. Vaughan 2nd in command of the 2nd Punjab Infantry, at the important post of Nuree, until the close of the cold weather, at least. The large detachment under Capt. Vaughan's command, amounting to about 1,000 men, consists of a company of Infantry of the Guide Corps, one of the new Police Battalions (late Soobhan Khan's Regiment, of the old Sikh army), and a party of Irregular Horse, with two guns of Lieut. Hay's Horse Field Battery.—Lahore Chronicle.

PESHAWUR is a prey to thieves and gaitery, to judge from the communications we continue to receive. The laetst (6th Feb.) says:—"The thieves are hard at it almost every night," and "we have had a round of balls and theatricals, and have the prospect of more." The Governor-General is likely to be in Peshawur sooner than was expected; the reputed difficulty of procuring food for his large number of followers by the way he is proceeding, being the hastening cause.—Ibid.

THE 1ST REGT. N.I. obtain promotion, at an expense of Rs. 12,000, by the retirement of Capt. C. Wright.

BENARES, Feb. 7.—"General Kennedy has inspected the regiments at this place, and also the artillery and irregular cavalry at Sultanpore. The General was much pleased with the appearance and steadiness of the 16th Grenadiers. I have heard the Commander-in-Chief was much taken with this corps. The 8th Irregulars are well mounted and the corps is in excellent order, but they failed sadly in their attempts at the native feats of breaking bottles, &c., which is just as well, for though these tricks show off the horsemanship to great advantage, it jades and knocks up the horses unnecessarily. I have heard that Colonel Gairdner is deputed to inspect the 24th at Gorruckpoor. General Kennedy himself goes in to Mirzapore to look at Foster's Irregulars."

THE 5TH LIGHT CAVALRY.—The Lahore Chronicle hears that charges have been sent in against an officer of the 5th Lt. Cavalry that will probably lead to a court-martial. They are chiefly connected with moving matters.

JHELUM is to be a "Puka" station, that is, all temporary buildings are to be knocked down and new ones commenced upon immediately: Lieut. Black, of the 37th N.I. is to be the executive officer until the arrival of Lieut. Pollard, Engineers, from Peshawur.

JUMBOO (from the Dereea-ee-Noor, Feb. 9).—Maharaja Goolab Sing has proceeded towards Ruhursee. After remaining three or four days he will wend his way towards Cashmere. The heir apparent, Meer Runbeer Sing, has remained at Jumbou, but will also proceed to Cashmere in a short time. The Ahulkars at Cashmere have received instructions to make the most extensive preparations for the reception of the Governor-General of India. The fire-works are to be very splendid. The complaints of the ryots of the oppressions they suffer, continue loud. Those who do manage to hoard up something, are plundered by the Ahulkars. The ryots have determined to make a strong representation to the Governor-General on his reaching Cashmere. The Maharaja has, on the other hand, given the most stringent orders to his Ahulkars to prevent any of the ryots from seeing the Governor-General."

THE AGRA BANK.—A letter, signed "C. S. Stowell," dated "Agra, Feb. 8," appears in the Mofussilite, which contains the following paragraphs:—"I have just returned from the meeting of shareholders of the Agra and U. S. Bank, and a more painfully disgusting scene I have never witnessed; as usual, I was in a minority, although well supported by the unbiassed resident shareholders, but the five directors (one a military subaltern lately arrived at the station), the chairman (a Mr. Longden), two servants of the bank, and the editor of the Delhi Gazette, formed a majority. By dint of perseverance, I extorted an admission from the directors that they had cancelled, sold, or otherwise made away with 826 of our shares, or four lacs and thirteen thousand rupees of our capital, but they were not prepared to give any account of the same! The directors, in their report of 16th August last, allude to 367 of those shares, as having been purchased in and cancelled by them, at a discount of from 5 to 10 per cent. which discount was placed to credit of the reserve fund! How? When? Where? But the remaining 459 shares, or Rs. 2,29,500 were never noticed in any way, until I brought forward the subject. I also demonstrated to the meeting that the last dividend, declared on the 16th of August last, viz. 8 per cent. and Rs. 64,827-3-7 to be carried to the reserve fund, was an Hudsonian one, as I proved that Rs. 75,071-5-8 had previously been abstracted from the reserve fund, and which had not been noticed in the report or the proceedings, and, consequently, our real divisible balance was less than 8 per cent.; at this stage of the proceedings, and while arguing in support of my amendment, "That the accounts be not passed without further investigation," I was unjustly but effectually put down by the editor of the Delhi Gazette proposing an amendment to my amendment, to the effect that, as the directors would at any other time give me information, I was only interrupting the proceedings; this was instantly carried, the accounts were as quickly passed, and thus a million of money is trifled with! I was forced to be silent or personal, and although greatly provoked, I chose the former."

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

THE HINDUSTANI LANGUAGE.

Camp, Rawul Pindee, Jan. 30, 1851.—With reference to G.O. G.G., dated 25th of June last, all officers on staff, civil, or other detached employment, who are subject to the rules laid down in G.G.O., No. 7, dated 7th Jan. 1837, and who failed, on or before the 1st instant, to pass the prescribed examination in Hindustani, are hereby remanded to regimental duty, and are directed to rejoin their regiments forthwith.

MADRAS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE AMPHITHEATRE AT MADRAS. — Signor Hillier's "Grand Arena of Arts" — "the Circus," has been attended by crowded audiences. The performances were of a varied character. The chief novelty was the début of an elk. We are told that, though the perfect indifference with which the elk listened to the discharge of a gun close to his ear was really surprising, all his active movements, his walking on his knees, and everything else of that kind, appeared to be forced out of him by violent coercion, and that the coercion had not yet been carried far enough to discipline him so that his performances might appear to be the effect of his will. His leaping over the horses could not be considered a very surprising feat in one of his tribe. The other performances were—the balancing of Mrs. Hillier. M. Jourdan and M. Dieckmann on the tight rope were much admired. The splendid horsemanship of Master Hillier and Miss Grace Hillier was the finest part of the whole exhibition. The beautiful horse Ackbar, and Colonel Felix's horse with Miss Hillier on his back, showed, to the astonishment of the assembly, what science could in a short time effect in training horses to exercises which seem to require a reasoning mind to go through.

SOCIETIES.—The Athenæum observes:—"If it were lawful for Christians to feel proud of anything, the Christian community of Madras might feel a pride in the numerous societies and associations which are flourishing amongst them, having in view the promotion either of the temporal or eternal good of those who might otherwise be neglected. Almost every one of these associations is in a state of progression—of increysing usefulness and increasing popular favour. This we are glad to say is the case with an institution of unexceptionably useful character, the Ladies' Female Workshop. In the report for the year the ladies of the committee express their thankfulness for the success granted to their efforts—and the report shows that while in 1849 the number of women and girls on their list was from sixty-five to seventy—during last year it has been from seventy-five to eighty—besides an increase of young children whose names do not appear in the list."

A NEW SCHOOL OF INDUSTRY has been set on foot in connexion with Dr. Hunter's School of Arts.

FRIEND-IN-NEED SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of the Friend-in-Need Society had been held. Sir C. Rawlinson did not preside, as was expected. The Hon. J. F. Thomas took the chair on the occasion.

THE MINT.—The abolition of the Mint establishment at this presidency has been determined upon, and that it will be announced officially at no distant period.

Major Balfour of the Artillery, Mr. Bourdillon of the Civil Service, and Captain F. Cotton of the Engineers, have been nominated the Commissioners of Inquiry regarding Public Works at the Madras Presidency. The Spectator asks why Colonel Arthur Cotton has not been placed on this committee?

MADRAS RELIGIOUS TRACT AND BOOK SOCIETY.—The thirty-second anniversary meeting was held in February, W. E. Underwood, Esq. presided. The Rev. W. Grant read the report. It stated that during the past year the committee had forwarded a list of such English books as experience had taught them were the most popular and useful, with a view to their being translated into the vernacular languages of southern India, to the parent society, accompanied with a request for pecuniary aid. 250l. were in consequence granted, on condition that the plan be carried out within three years. So soon as this was known, Rs. 1,000 were placed at their disposal by a gentleman in the presidency. The number of tracts and bound volumes, both in English and the vernacular, issued during the past year, was 196,693; 24,000 above the corresponding numbers in the previous year. The whole income of the society, including last year's balance and the price of books sold, was Rs. 10,105. 0a. 9p.; the expenditure, Rs. 7,211. 0a. 5p.; leaving a balance in favour of the society of Rs. 2,894. 0a. 4p. A sum of 397l. 14s. 10d. was however due to the parent society for English books received, besides the value of a large additional supply recently ordered. The Rev. Mr. Braidwood moved the first resolution, which was seconded by Major Maclean, and the report was then adopted.

THE HON. SIR W. BURTON, puisne judge, had arrived from Calcutta by the Hindustan. A salute of fifteen guns was fired from the fort on the occasion.

MILITARY ITEMS.—The left wing of the 28th N.I. from Khyook Phyoo, under the command of Lieut. Broome, disembarked from the steamer Tenasserim, and encamped on the Beach esplanade. They shifted their encamping ground to the Black Town esplanade. Two hundred tons of coal were shipped on board the Hon. Company's steamer Tenasserim. Ten lacs of treasure were also sent on board of her, and a remaining ten lacs was subsequently to be put on board, together with sundry stores on account of Government. She proceeds to Khyook Phyoo to bring on the head-quarters of the 28th N.I. to Madras. The invalids, &c., of her Majesty's regiments of this presidency embarked on board the Vernon, under the command of Capt. Wells, H.M. 25th regiment.

BANGALORE, FEB. 7.—We hear from Bellary that small pox is very prevalent among the native inhabitants of the place, and that many cases have proved fatal. The medical men of the station are exerting themselves to the utmost to check the ravages of the dreadful disease, but unfortunately the benighted people are strongly prejudiced against vaccination, and all their exertions here, in a great measure, proved unavailing.

Our Kamptee correspondent acquaints us that the head-quarters and six companies of the 10th regiment N.I. arrived there on the 1st Feb., and after halting the Sunday, proceeded to Seetabuldee on the following day. They had been most fortunate in having no sickness at all. The head-quarters and right wing of the 23rd L.I. were under orders to march for Saugor on the 10th Feb. The details of the 24th N.I. under command of Capt. Young, were to accompany them, as also a small party of artillery recruits. There had been a most unpropitious change in the weather, which was cloudy and close, and the thermometer had risen between 30 deg. and 40 deg. during the last ten days.

Surgeon Graham, who had accompanied the 10th regiment from Saugor, had assumed charge of the superintending surgeon's department from Surgeon Harrison.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

MOVEMENT OF TROOPS.

Fort St. George, Feb. 14.—Those parts of G.G.O. of 13th Dec. 1850, and 24th Dec. 1850, which direct respectively the removal of the 50th N.I. from Moulmein to Madras, and the 43rd N.I. from Madras to Khyook Phyoo, are cancelled, and the following movement is ordered.

50th N.I. from Moulmein to Palaveram.

CAPTURE OF DAROOR.

Extract of General Orders by the Resident, on the part of the Nizam's Government, dated Hyderabad Residency, 17th Feb. 1851.

The Resident is pleased to direct that the subjoined copy of a despatch from Brigadier Beatson be published for the information of the Nizam's army, and he regrets that an accidental delay in its transmission to head-quarters should have prevented his promulgating, at an earlier period, a report so highly honourable to the force recently employed at Daroor, and to the army in general of which it forms a part.

The Fort of Daroor, which is one of the strongest in His Highness the Nizam's dominions, fell into the hands of a party of 141 men (127 of these being Affghans), who, having been previously confined as prisoners there, had risen upon the Nizam's irregular troops which formed the garrison, and obtained possession of the place.

It was of importance to re-capture it without delay, and the Resident entrusted this duty to Brigadier Beatson, who has fully and conspicuously justified the selection.

A large force, as below, was directed to assemble for the purpose in view, because, although the number of the besieged was small, the place was, by its natural position, all but impregnable on three of its sides, while the fourth and remaining portion had been rendered as strong as native skill could make it.

Force actually at Daroor.—Artillery.

2 18-Pounders.

2 8-Inch Mortars.

1 8-Inch Howitzer.

3 6-Pounder Guns.

1 12-Pounder Howitzer.

Cavalry.

2 Squadrons 4th Nizam's Cavalry.

1 Do. 5th Do.

Infantry.

3 Companies 4th Infantry.

4 Companies 5th Infantry.

6th Regiment Nizam's Infantry.

En route to Dharoor at the time of its surrender.

1 18-Pounder Gun from Hingolie.

Another and important reason for surrounding the place with so large a force, was to prevent the escape of the men who had seized it, their accumulated crimes rendering it necessary, in the Resident's opinion, that a severe example of them should be made.

Brigadier Beatson summoned them to surrender, but received only a refusal. He adopted, therefore, regular means for reducing the place; and a fire being opened on the fort on the 27th ultimo, a practicable breach was effected on the 4th instant, and the troops were prepared to move to the assault, when the party which had defended it surrendered, and laid down their arms.

It now only remains for the Resident to return his best thanks to the able and gallant officer who has so well obeyed his orders, and to notify his entire approbation of his conduct, as well as that of the officers and men who served under him at Daroor.

The Resident's acknowledgments are particularly due to the several officers, European and Native, whose names Brigadier Beatson has brought to his notice, and eminently so to Captain Loyd for the valuable services he rendered both as an artillery officer and engineer.

Superintending-Surgeons Geddes and Riddell, the former belonging to the Hyderabad Subsidiary Force, and the latter to the Contingent, with zealous and laudable spirit tendered their services, the value of which is now cordially acknowledged by the Resident.

Mr. F. Soutir, who again volunteered at Daroor, has renewed his claim to that commendation which his former conduct at Rymow was considered to deserve.

EDUCATION OF NATIVES.

At the distribution of prizes at the Elphinstone Institution, on the 13th February, presided over by the Board of Education, Sir E. Perry, the President, in his closing address, said:—"The public are well aware, and none more so than those young gentlemen, puggree-wallahs, who are listening to me now, of the matters which have long been in dispute regarding the education of the natives of this country, though few, perhaps, have been able to discover what those points really are. The main question was, whether it was possible to educate the natives of India in the superior branches of science through the medium of the English language. A gentleman of exalted talent in this presidency, to whom the cause of education owes much, has laid it down broadly, that, to teach the English language to the natives of this country, is to teach them words merely—words by which they are incapable of communicating their ideas to others; to give them a parrot-like education, producing merely a superior race of purvoes, and in the end accomplishing nothing. If it be the case, the evils which must result from such a course are fearful, and the only way in which the friend of education can accomplish his object,—the spread of that education,—is to devote his time and labour to the task of translation, and studying the language of the natives: this is a serious consideration. Government has decided, as on former occasions, and as all the authorities have decided, that a superior education in the higher branches of science must be communicated through the medium of English. This is one broad fact, which has become evident from the events of the year; and another broad fact—one so broad that any man who runs may read—is, that in the present year had been promulgated a most remarkable demonstration of the fact as to whether those who are taught well in the English language are unable to propagate the blessing which they possess among their fellow-men. Many gentlemen who have heard carefully the answers given to the questions put to them,—questions answered on the spur of the moment,—have satisfied their minds with regard to another demonstration. But these two demonstrations are before you,—these two broad facts on which to satisfy the mind of the public; first, that the Government and the Board of Education have decided that the correct system of education to be pursued in schools for natives is the one which the Government has adopted. The Government and the Board of Education have been attacked with great freedom of discussion on all sides, but none of us (the Board of Education) have felt disposed to quarrel with it, because we feel but little confidence, comparatively speaking, on the subject. One of the more formidable of the attacks is, perhaps, one which has come from a class of men who have much interest in the education of the natives; I mean the missionaries. They had complained that the course of education pursued wanted the chief things which should distinguish a national education. They complained that, in the course of education pursued, no attention was paid to the moral training of the youth educated. That charge was made, and ably supported, by a high authority in this presidency. It is clear, however,—it appears so to me,—that it is not possible that men, of the class to which our public instructors have belonged, could have bestowed their time in educating youth without imparting to them moral instruction at the same time. You are aware that natives educated in this institution have evinced, for years past, not only such moral conduct in private life as has excited the admiration of everybody, but also as high moral actions, as good citizens, as the youth of any country could display; for we see them, by their own exertions, unaided by the influence of rank, or station, or patronage, spend their time in the erection of institutions for the benefit of their fellow-countrymen, their vernacular schools, their literary society, and their vernacular publications; and these are owing to that moral training which they have had under the professors from whom they have derived the varied attainments they possess."

MISCELLANEOUS.

A PROCESS OF PURIFYING SUGAR, and freeing it from its molasses, lately put in practice in the West Indies, has been tried with the most perfect success at Bombay. The mixed material called ghoor,—sugar and molasses combined,—are put into a conical-shaped tin vessel, full of very fine holes, like a cullender; to this a very rapid rotatory motion is given (2,000 a minute) by means of slips and pulleys, when the worthless portions are expelled by the power of centrifugal force, and the sugar in a few minutes' time is left perfectly white and clean. The cane is placed in a large tub, to collect the molasses, which is drawn off by a plughole outside. The construction of the machine does not seem to be at all beyond the capacity of native mechanics; there is no risk or uncertainty in its use, and it performs its work with such extreme rapidity, that a single machine, with a succession of canes, can turn out a quantity of prepared sugar that is quite amazing.

THE LATE CAPT. R. DOWSON.—We regret to have to announce the demise of Capt. Ralph Dowson, 5th Bengal N. I., lately commanding the 2nd Punjaub Cavalry, which occurred at Bombay on Wednesday morning, where he had arrived on his way to England on medical furlough. The Telegraph of yesterday states that the deceased gentleman "died in a state of great destitution, caused by his pay being sequestered by order of Government to meet some retrenchments against his accounts for furnishing arms to one of the new Punjaub regiments which he commanded." The deceased gentleman entered the service as an ensign in February, 1835, obtained his lieutenantancy in December, 1837, and his captaincy in January, 1842. He was present at the forcing of the Khyber Pass in 1839; served throughout the campaign in Affghanistan 1840-41-42, including the siege of Jellalabad, and defeat of Ukhbar Khan, 7th April, 1842, for which he received a medal. He was with the army which re-occupied Cabool, and for this received a medal. He was likewise present with the force under General Whish at the siege and operations in the vicinity of Mooltan, and the battle of Goojrat, for which he received a medal and clasp. His demise promotes Lieutenant F. Maitland and Ensign P. J. Sanctuary to the next superior grades.—Bombay Times, March 1.

WATER.—Great efforts are being made to provide Bombay with a regular supply of water,—that on the spot, abundant as it is for a tropical island, falling greatly short of the wants of our population, now verging on half a million. The report of Captain Crawford has been most favourably received by the Court of Directors: he proposes building a large dam across the mouth of a valley amongst the hills at Salsette, and creating an artificial lake. This will afford 100,000 gallons an hour to Bombay, with a minimum head of water of seventy feet; it is proposed to be brought in in a two foot iron pipe by the line of the railway. The lake will be twelve miles from the point of delivery, and the cost is estimated at 150,000*l.*; one gentleman has offered to subscribe 40,000*l.* of this!—Bombay Times, March 2.

REVIEW.—The Commander-in-Chief, Sir John Grey, held on Monday evening, Feb. 24, a general review of the whole of the troops at the presidency, and the manner in which the various manœuvres and evolutions were gone through elicited his warmest approval.

THE LATE LIEUT.-COL. C. CRAWLEY.—News was received on Thursday in Bombay, of the death of Lieut.-Col. Charles Crawley, 20th Bo. N.I., temporarily commanding the S. D. A., which took place on the 25th Feb., at the top of the Kilghur ghaut, six miles from the Mahabuleswar Hills, whither he was proceeding on sick leave: his corpse was taken into Mahabuleswar the same morning. The late Col. Crawley entered the army as a cadet in 1817: he obtained his ensigncy on the 12th July, 1818, his lieutenantcy on the following day, his captaincy on the 20th April 1826, his majority on the 16th April 1838, and his lieut.-colonelcy on the 4th Jan. 1845. The deceased, when a lieutenant, served in the Persian Gulf, at the siege and capture of Ras-el-Khyma, at Beni-boo-Ali in 1821, and in the Serohie territories and at the capture of Limbuj in 1824. He was highly esteemed and respected by all who knew him, and was considered one of the smartest officers in the service. His death gives promotion to the following officers of the 6th N.I.:—Major W. Macan, Captain and Brevet Major D. Carstairs, Lieut. B. Kay, and Ensign S. C. Milford, and posts Cadet C. W. Wigney to the corps.—Bombay Times, March 1.

ATMOSPHERIC DISTURBANCES, of simultaneous occurrence over a vast region of space, and which will in all likelihood have been observed in Europe, occurred on the 12th of February. On this day the barometer reached its minimum at Bombay and Calcutta, 1,200 miles apart, after a synchronous descent of three days: it continued to fall at Madras till the 16th. At the first-named place southerly winds with clouds and rain prevailed on the 12th, and on the same day there was rain at Baroda; a violent dust storm at Kurrachee, showers at Aden, and heavy rain at Lahore and throughout the Punjab. On the 10th, there was a thunder storm, and on the 11th a north-wester at Calcutta. On the 9th, and again on the 14th, there was a furious thunder storm at Muttra; the storm was felt at Sheergotta on the grand trunk road, as also at Agra on the same day. In Nainee Tal the storm was accompanied by an earthquake. Immense floods both in the Sutlej and Jumna accompanied the gale; a disturbance, not quite so violent or so generally felt, was experienced betwixt the 4th and 6th, accompanied, on the former day, by an earthquake at Wuzerabad, Lahore, Ferozepore, and probably all over the Punjab.—Bombay Times, Nov. 2.

THE GUICKWAR—as the independent ruler of Baroda is called—seems to be a really enlightened prince. We learn from the Bombay papers that his highness is now engaged on a visit to Tankaria Bunder, with a view to complete his plans for the introduction of railways into his principality, as well as to select a site for the erection of a church.

FRAUDS.—A commission, consisting of Mr. Townsend, revenue commissioner for the southern division, of Mr. Frere, judge at Dharwar; and Maj. Le Grand Jacob, resident at the court of the Rao of Cutch, has just been appointed by the Bombay government to inquire into a fraud in the collection of the wheel tax, amounting to some 3,000*l.* or 4,000*l.*, and which was disclosed on the appointment of an European as a collector. Better men than those just named could not have been selected, and the high position they hold in the service, and distances from which they have been brought, sufficiently indicate the importance attached by government to the objects of their inquiries. Meanwhile the principal native witness has been suddenly carried off—it is said by cholera, not without suspicions being entertained of foul play having been practised against him. Rumours are rife as to those implicated in the embezzlement, the unhappy indebtedness of parties obtaining for them an evil name, which, beyond the blame of indiscretion, will be found, we doubt not, undeserved. To secure conviction, duplicate receipts were got subscribed: one set was presented and the cash received appropriated; the other set was preserved as an evidence that the amount was still outstanding. The amount of scandal attaching to our name from the involvements of so many of the most eminent of our public servants, is deplorable; in India, debt and venality are indissolubly associated together in the native mind.—Bombay Times, March 2.

THE RAILWAY is already proceeding rapidly; the portion under the new contract already in progress commences where the road from Matoonga and Parell joins that to Mahim, where the latter turns off to enter Mahim-wood. The embankment for the line from this towards Sion exceeds apparently a mile in length: the material for it is excavated from canals parallel to the line itself. It consists of hard brown earth full of kunkur, and reposing apparently on the whitish-coloured trap rock, with vitrified shales such as prevail at the back of Government-house, fragments of this abounding in the earth. The blue clay of the flats seems here to be interrupted by this, probably an older, formation. The railway will, we hope, amongst other things, assist geologists in their researches.—Ibid.

The Government were inviting tenders for the conveyance of 1,000 bales of cotton to Liverpool.

THE 4TH COMPANY 2ND BATTALION ARTILLERY left Bombay on the 18th Feb. for Panwell, en route for Ahmednuggur.

COTTON.—Thirty-two bags of small stones were exported from the Arthur Bunder, on the 28th February, for the place from whence they came, viz. Verawul, the weight of which was 33 cwt., and which appear to have been picked from about 288 docras of cotton, purchased in Bombay by an European firm at Rs. 114 per candy!—Bombay Times.

CAPT. W. A. ST. CLAIR, of the Artillery, has been allowed to retire from the service from the 28th Feb. This will give promotion to 1st Lieut. A. B. Kemball and 2nd Lieut. A. Blunt, and bring Supernumerary F. Swanson on the list of the latter rank. Capt. St. Clair lately commanded the 2nd tr. H. A.; he has been in the army upwards of twenty-three years, during which time he has seen some hard service. The subjoined is from the Times' Army List for the present year:—"Capt. St. Clair served with the army of the Indus as lieut. and adjt. 4th tr. H. A., from 1838 till May 1840. Was present at the attack on Ghuznee on the morning of 21st; on the 23rd July, 1839, at the capture by storm of the city of Ghuznee; and received a medal. Again took the field with the 4th troop, and served under Major-Gen. Brooks in the night march to the relief of the detachment before the Fort of Khujjuck, 21st and 22nd Feb. 1841. Marched with the 4th troop against Nooskey, May, 1841, and returned to Quetta. Left Quetta 28th Sept. 1841, made the experimental march with the troop, rid Mustoong, Kelat, the Barun Lukh Pass, Soumeanee, and Kurrachee. Embarked for Mandavee, and returned through Kutch to Deesa; arrived 31st Dec. 1841, having marched with the 4th troop H. A. from Nov. 1838, to Dec. 1841, upwards of 5,000 miles.—Bombay Times.

MAHABULESHWAR, Feb. 21, 1851.—The hills are now literally alive with gentlefolks and fair ladies, and the weather delightfully charming. Everybody appears to be brisk and lively, from the richest merchant down to the very lowest vendor of small grain—as the principal roads and thoroughfares are constantly full of loaded bullocks and tattoos with the products of the rich valleys around. There are several new Bungalows being built; among the number is a new jail for the convicts—a substantial and fine-looking building, and is getting on rapidly towards completion. A new library is also in progress, and bids fair to be a commodious and comfortable resort, much more so than the former one, which has been sold off some time ago for a trifle,—the owner has transformed it into a billiard-room; it is quite contiguous to the new library, and will afford the means of enjoying and whiling away many a spare hour in the scientific and noble game of billiards. There are some private Bungalows being built also, and they are expected to be complete before the setting in of the monsoons. The folks here are anticipating to see the time when a long and beautiful range of Bungalows will extend from this to Panchn Gunny, where, instead of hurrying down to Bombay and Poona, to get clear of the dreadful monsoons, they may by a short ride escape the deluge.

CEYLON.

PRECIOUS STONES.—A correspondent asks if it "is lawful for a person to dig for precious stones on his 'own private property in Ceylon, and appropriate those found to his own private use?" We answer yes—yes. The privilege of digging for precious stones was at one time farmed by Government, and at that time, we suppose, a man could not appropriate pieces of coloured quartz found on his own land, any more than he could, in the days of the monopoly, use or root up the cinnamon bushes that grew in his garden. But Government, like Holman the blind traveller, found out that "the precious stones of Ceylon were precious humbugs;" every man may now dig who is not ashamed of the occupation, or who indulges the insane hope of being remunerated for his exertions. There is a great variety of minerals in Ceylon, interesting in a scientific point of view; but the term "precious stones" is a misnomer, save as applied to an occasional cat's-eye. In grants of land, besides materials for road-making (the real "precious stones" of the island), the only reservation made in favour of the crown is in regard to "mines of precious metals;" and the exception may well be abandoned, we believe, for all the probability there is that a mine of any metal more precious than plumbago will ever be found in Ceylon. Iron stone is scattered over the mountains, and the mineralogist is every now and then tantalized with indications of copper and tin in shapes infinitely insignificant. But for iron ore, or mines of more precious metals, search has been made in vain; and he who talks of the mineral riches of Ceylon, in a commercial point of view (whether with reference to railway or any other way), is as great a "humbug" in his way as is the plausible Tamby Marcair, or Ismael Lebbe, of Colombo or Galle, who palms off his bits of coloured glass on strangers of the order Griffin as "very good e-stone; fine rubies got, blood e-stone, amethyst, moon e-stone, will sell plenteer cheaper!"—Colombo Observer, Jan. 27.

SIAM.

Extract of a letter received per Siamese brig Siam:—"Although the English and American treaties expressly stipulate that the duty on the vessel shall cover all dues and charges of every kind, yet the Siamese have for several years managed to levy a duty in some way on nearly all kinds of exports, and on many imports. It is also stipulated in said treaties that foreign merchants shall in no way be hindered in purchasing the products of the country; but the king, in order to increase his revenues, has farmed the principal products, making them a complete monopoly. The king, princes, nobles, and their favourites, having become the principal traders, have so managed and controlled the trade of the country, as to keep out nearly all foreign vessels. Several foreign merchants have at times chartered the government vessels, and in this way were able to trade to some advantage; but the nobles and collectors of revenue have grown more and more strict and exorbitant, and there is now but little, if any, advantage in trading with the king's ships; and besides, some of the nobles have, within a few years past, built several vessels after European models, with junk heads, and reported them to the king as junks, by which means they are able to sail them as such, thereby avoiding the duty of square-rigged vessels, and making it impossible for foreign ships to compete with them. The diplomatic missions both of the United States and of England have utterly failed of success."—N. China Herald.

CHINA.

THE JEWS OF K'HAU-FUNG-FOO.—The Bishop of Victoria, on his arrival in Hongkong, entered into a correspondence with the Rev. W. H. Medhurst, in Shanghai, requesting his assistance towards procuring information about the Jews in China, and forwarding to him a string of queries on that subject. Mr. Medhurst prepared a plan, which was this: to send two trustworthy individuals to K'hae-fung-foo, the city where the Jews were supposed to be, to make inquiries, and bring down such information and documents as could be easily procurable. The persons he had in view were native Christians, trained under the auspices of the London Missionary Society; one of them a literary graduate from Chin-keang-foo, and the other a young man who had been brought up in the Mission School at Batavia, could read and write English, and, after having had his Christian character tested by long experience, had been employed as a tract colporteur in the interior.

On the arrival of the Bishop in Shanghai, the plan and the persons to whom it was to be entrusted were brought before his attention. The Bishop perceived the propriety of the measure, and the persons alluded to were despatched accordingly. The name of the graduate was Tsëang-yüng-chè, and that of the young man K'hew-t'hiên-sang. The latter, though the youngest, was made the principal agent, chiefly because, from long acquaintance with his character, we could place most confidence in him, and because, being able to write English, he could give his own account of the journey, which would be immediately intelligible to the lady (Miss Cook) who had projected the scheme and advanced the funds.

On the 15th November last they started from Shanghai in a boat which was engaged to convey them directly to Ts'ling-këang-poo, a town situated in the prefecture of Hwae-gnan-foò, on the banks of the grand canal, where it joins the Yellow river (lat. 33° 33' N., long. 2° 50' E. of Peking). In order to reach this place, they availed themselves of the grand canal, which passes through the cities of Soo-chow, Chang-chow, and Chin-keang-foo, where it crosses the great river Yang-tsze-keang, and pursues its course in a northerly direction past Yang-chow-foo, Kaou-yew, and Paou-ying, until it reaches the Yellow river. Arrived at that point, they had to pursue their journey by land; for which purpose they hired a cart, drawn by two mules, and, following the course of the Yellow river, sometimes on the north bank, and at other times on the south, they reached the place of their destination.

The travellers represent the Yellow river as at that season rather shallow, insomuch that at one place it could be forded by a cart. Its banks, however, were very high, and frequent indications appeared of its having overflowed the same during the rainy season, as exhibited in the marshes and lakes which abound along its course, in the midst of which garden-trees and the remains of ruined houses are to be seen. The country in the neighbourhood of the river is, in consequence, but thinly peopled, and the few inhabitants left are poor and miserable. Places that figure on the map as distinct cities, presented to the travellers nothing but an assemblage of thatched cottages, with the walls which once surrounded them entirely demolished, and a solitary gateway here and there. The roads were very rough, causing the cart to jolt excessively: they led sometimes along the top of the bank, and at other times pursued the bed of the stream, in those parts which had been left dry by the receding tide. Here the cart was knee-deep in sand, and there tumbling over rugged stones. Their driver, whose good graces they were obliged to propitiate, insisted on starting every morning at three or four o'clock, and it was generally mid-day before they could reach a place where refreshments were to be procured. At the close of the day they generally stopped to rest for the night, and yet they did not make above twenty or thirty miles a day. At length, after a very tedious journey, they arrived at K'hae-fung-foo (lat. 34° 55' N., long. 1° 50' W. of Peking).

They found many Mahomedans residing there, who made no secret of their religion, but wrote on their sign-boards the faith to which they belonged. These Mussulmans were the principal tavern-keepers, and with one of them the travellers put up. Their first inquiry was for the Jews, whom they asked for under the designation of the T'heaou-kin-keau, or 'Pluck-sinew-religion'; an appellation which had been assumed or assigned in consequence of their plucking the chief sinew of the legs of all animals slaughtered for food. (See Gen. xxxii. 32.) The Mahomedan host immediately directed them to their synagogue. There was no difficulty in finding it; but oh, how changed, from the time when the Jesuit missionaries visited it a century ago! The outer wall of the inclosure was broken down, the front gate choked up with rubbish, the monumental pillars, the inscription tablets, the stone balustrades in front of the temple, and various other ornamental appendages, broken or prostrated, and the very walls of the temple in many places dilapidated. The side apartments, which had been designed as chapels in honour of the patriarchs, but poorly served to afford shelter to the few wretched sons of Israel who were huddled together in them, sleeping on the bare ground, with scarcely a rag to cover them, and barely sufficient to support nature. So much, indeed, were they reduced in circumstances, that they had begun to dispose of the fallen bricks and prostrate timbers, of which the various apartments once consisted, to procure for themselves the necessities of life. Yea, they had gone so far as to sell a piece of the ground of the inclosure by which the temple was surrounded to the neighbouring heathen, who were encroaching on its precincts by their ever-enlarging pagan temples. Yet there was enough to show what had been its former glory. The gateways and inscriptions were still there; the holy place was in existence, and its interior was beautifully decorated with gorgeous painting and elaborate gildings. Our travellers entered the holiest of all, from which polluted feet are not now debarred, and saw the tubes containing the rolls of the law, which they unrolled and examined. These rolls, twelve in number, were each about thirty feet in length, by two or three in width, written on white sheep-skins, in a small character; but the room in which they were found was so dark, that our travellers could not examine them thoroughly. It may be asked, how strangers are now permitted to intrude into the holy precincts, when, a century ago, the Jesuit missionaries, backed with all the influence derived from the Imperial Court, were not allowed to enter, or examine the records? The reply is, they have had no Rabbi for fifty years; and there is not one of the professors of Judaism in K'hae-fung-foo who can read one word of Hebrew! They have even discontinued the practice of circumcision, and our travellers conceived that, in a dozen more years, few or no traces of the Israelitish religion will there be found. They did what they could, however, to rescue what remained from oblivion: they gave money to the bystanders, and urged them to set up one of the two inscription tablets in front of the temple, which had fallen down. This they copied, as well as the writing that was traceable on the tablet that was still standing. They took memoranda of all the inscriptions yet preserved over the doorways and in front of the temple; they even copied the Hebrew inscriptions in the interior of the building, which are found to correspond exactly with those given by the Jesuit missionaries; while they measured accurately the length and breadth of the buildings, and brought away a very intelligible ground-plan of the whole inclosure, as well as of the interior of the principal building. The most important achievement, however, and that which may tell on the interests of religion and the science of biblical criticism is, the bringing away of eight Hebrew manuscripts, six of them containing portions of the Old Testament Scriptures, and two of them consisting of the liturgy used in the weekly services of the Hebrew people, and on holiday occasions; in which latter documents, also, various portions of Scripture are to be met with. The portions of Scripture are from the 1st to the 6th chapters of Exodus, from the 38th to the 40th chapters of the same book, Leviticus 19th and 20th chapters, Numbers 13th, 14th, and 15th chapters, Deuteronomy from the 11th to the 16th chapters, with the 32nd chapter of that book. Various portions of the Pentateuch, Psalms, and Hagiographia, occur in the book of prayers, which have not yet been definitively fixed. The character in which these portions are written is an antique form of the Hebrew, with points. They are written on thick paper, evidently by means of a style, and the material employed, as well as the silk in which the books are bound, exhibit marks of a foreign origin. Two Israelitish gentlemen, to whom they have been shown in Shanghai, say that they have seen such books in Aden; and the occurrence here and there of Persian words, written with Hebrew letters, in the notes appended, seem to indicate that the books in question came originally from the western part of Asia, perhaps Persia or Arabia. There is no trace whatever of the Chinese character about them, and they must have been manufactured entirely by foreigners residing in China, or who have come from a foreign country. Regarding their age, it would be difficult to hazard even a conjecture. It is most likely that they are not recent importations into China; it is also more than probable that no person in China has transcribed them within these fifty years, as the Rabbi has been dead for that period of time. The text from which these copies were taken may have been brought to China at any period between the first visit of the Jews to this country, and the time of their discovery there by the Jesuit missionaries. Could the rolls of the law which were seen by our travellers be obtained, some light might be thrown on this interesting inquiry. In the mean time, the manuscripts now obtained will be of some value, as independent, if not very ancient, evidences in favour of the Sacred writings. It is intended to have fac-similes of these manuscripts engraved, and published for the inspection of the curious; and the journals of our travellers, one kept in Chinese and the other in English, with their description of the temple, will, as speedily as possible, be printed and circulated.

The whole time occupied in going and returning was fifty-five days, five of which were spent at K'hae-fung-foo.—North China Herald, Jan. 11.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Cape papers to the 3rd February (one day later than the preceding advices) add little to the intelligence reported in our last issue.

Hopes are entertained that the Amaga'eka chief Krel, would keep his people from joining the Caffre confederacy. Everything is reported to be quiet, both in Krel's and the T'Slambie country. The resolution of the Fingoes had daunted the rebels.

A general order of the Governor, dated 24th January, expresses satisfaction at the conduct of the mounted riflemen, under Major Armstrong, and 150 Fingoes, who had been sent out that day from King William's Town to drive off a party of bullying Caffres. "Scarcely were they well away from the town," the order says, "when they were surrounded by upwards of 600 of Seyolo's and Anta's Caffres. Major Armstrong was able to report his position, when 100 men of the Cape mounted rifles, one six-pounder gun of the royal artillery, the 73rd regiment, and two battalions of the levy, the one having marched in yesterday, the other being in the act of marching into town, were sent off, under Col. Mackinnon, to support Major Armstrong, as it was believed that a still larger number of the rebels were near. This support was unnecessary, however rapidly rendered; for the Cape mounted rifles and Fingoes had already given the enemy a glorious defeat, notwithstanding the disparity of number, many having been killed, with a loss on our side of one trooper wounded, and of one Fingo killed in the act of assisting the wounded trooper."

A private account states that the Caffres sustained a loss of 24 men killed on the field, among whom were two petty chiefs and several headmen.

Lamentable reports still appear in the journals of the desolations committed by the Caffres and Hottentots; cattle and stock have been swept off in great numbers. "In short," says a private letter, "this part of the country, inhabited by so many intelligent, affluent, and enterprising British farmers, appears to be completely at the mercy of the insurgent Hottentots, who are in league with the Caffres to exterminate their common friend and benefactor, the white man. The spirit maddens, and the heart sickens, at the horrible prospect. The rebellion of the Hottentots evidently furnishes a key to the present policy of the Caffre chiefs. The Caffres were to engage the troops, when the Hottentots were to plunder the colony."

EFFECTS OF RAILWAYS IN INDIA.—Mr. Chapman says:—"I conceive that one of the effects of the railway system will be to bring into every village affected by it such a knowledge of the contrivances and appliances of other countries, and such means of obtaining them, as will first put the hereditary and stipendiary village artizanship of India to full proof of its capabilities, and then, if needful, supply its defects. This natural result was promptly illustrated by the Patel of a village, to whom I put this question: 'Suppose I brought you a plough very superior to your own, but one the like of which your balowty blacksmith could not make; what would you do?'—'Stop his balowty allowance till he could,' was the reply. Without anticipating so violent dealing with the system as this, it cannot be doubted that, under the influence of railways, all the great disadvantages of that system must eventually disappear, and the plough, cart, and well of the Mahratta ryot, become as efficient as those of an English farmer."

From the Report of the Commissioners of Railways it appears that, at the close of the past year, the whole extent of the railway communication open for traffic is divided between the different parts of the kingdom in the following proportion. In England and Wales there are 5,132 miles; in Scotland, 951; in Ireland, 538; total in the United Kingdom, 6,621 miles; that upwards of 190,000 persons have, since May, 1847, been thrown out of employment upon railways; and that the total number of persons killed upon railways during the year has amounted to 216, and of persons injured to 256.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

A treatise upon Yang-sin-Shin, or 'Fostering the Spirit of the Mind,' translated by Dr. Medhurst, and published in the Chinese Repository for August, furnishes a curious and by no means unfavourable specimen of the Moral Philosophy of China. The author, a learned man, recently deceased in Keang-se, is described by Dr. Medhurst as "a genuine modern Chinese philosopher, having derived his ideas solely from native sources." His works extend to forty volumes. We subjoin the greater portion of the treatise:—

"There is nothing more intelligent than spirit, but when men do not know how to foster it, then spirits become spiritless, because of their want of intelligence. When men allow the seven passions and the six objects of desire to disturb their spirit, although at the time their bodily powers are most vigorous, and they might otherwise promote the growth of their spiritual energies, yet their spirits remain dark. That their spirits should be dark is still a small matter; but by gratifying every kind of relish and attachment, and by thinking on things that they have no need of, and ought not to think of, they leave their spirits without a moment's rest, until their spirits are dissipated and confused, and have no home to return to. Hence the rationalist doctors laid so much stress on fostering the spiritual energies, considering that when the spirit was kept still, wisdom would spontaneously spring up; when wisdom sprang up, the virtuous nature, decreed to be conferred by heaven, would manifest itself in the very centre of our mental being; until, without aim and without effort, we might combine in ourselves the natural tendencies to good which emanate from the Mighty Infinite; thus, by cultivating stillness, they nourished their spiritual energies. Their disciples, having missed the original aim, have been despised by the literati and the Buddhists, because they aimed only at nourishing their bodily powers; and their spirits, bright and intelligent though they be, were unable to attain to the virtuous nature conferred by the decree of heaven: all this because they allowed the spirit of emulation to contend within, esteeming themselves to be right and others wrong, consorting only with men of similar views, and opposing all who differed from them, little thinking that that by which we can cause our virtuous nature to expand, until it fills the universe, is the human spirit; and that that by which our natural life is enabled to extend its pantings, is also the human spirit.

"The modern alchemists, however, swallowing medicaments in order to foster their spirits, are very gross in their conceptions, and would never succeed in fostering the same by stillness, without renouncing the sensualities and passions, so as not to be influenced by them. The way in which men enter deeply into the great principles of reason is by cultivating perfect stillness, when their spirits become settled: as when a sharp bodkin is employed to penetrate substances, there is nothing so hard that it will not perforate. The literati, employing their energies in the pursuit of knowledge, and making it their daily business to increase their acquaintance with things, consider that their intelligence is sufficient to understand all matters, while they have a pit before them which everybody else can see, and they stalk on till they fall into it. What is the cause of this, but their allowing the spirit of their minds to gallop away after external objects, like a man occupied with looking at distant mountains, not knowing that his feet have already fallen into a quagmire? The polished scholars of the present day esteem themselves to be the most clever people in the world, and sometimes they are outwitted by men of a very inferior stamp, and entangled in the meshes of their nets, because their spirits are dissipated about external annoyances, and they are unable to cultivate an acquaintance with themselves: all this arises from want of silent meditation. Others, again, seeking to avert calamities and obtain blessings, pray to spiritual intelligences, because they think that such are intelligent and incomprehensible by mankind, not knowing that the visible and invisible worlds, being separated one from another, the medium whereby our spirits in this seen world can communicate with the invisible spirits of the unseen world is just because spirits with spirits hold intercourse together, without being trammelled by the limits of external form.

"Since, then, our own spirits can hold intercourse with the spirits of the invisible world, it is clear that our spirits must, like them, be intelligent. Hence it was that, when the ancients offered sacrifices, they fasted to a great extent, in order to settle their own spirits, and then they could hold intercourse with the spirits which pervade heaven and earth, together with the manes of their ancestors. Some, however, who insist upon discerning some visible traces of their being, think that the existence of spiritual essences is, after all, a mere pretence. But when our bodies, from the hair on the head to the sole of the foot, happen to experience the least pain or itching, it is immediately perceived by the mind: the reason of this is, that our spirits, though collected in the heart, pervade at the same time every part of the body. Taking our bodies, therefore, as a ground of argument, we should say that there is not a separate mind for every part of the head, eyes, hands, and feet; but the heart resides in the centre, and is fully acquainted with every pain connected with each hair and fibre; it is not necessary for the ear to listen, or the eye to see, or the hand to feel, but the mind is instantly acquainted with it, as speedily as echo follows sound. If the mind, however, be absent, a man sees without perceiving, and hears without noticing, because the spirit is taken up with something else, and impeded by that one thing. The mind is, however, the same, and when sensation and perception are sometimes different, are we to account that the spirit is different? But how can the spirit be different? The spirit, although unobstructed by matter, cannot avoid being influenced and enslaved by every partial and private thing it observes; and although pervading the whole body, as that which is general passes through every particular, yet being influenced and enslaved by other things, the spirit cannot be in everything perspicuous and clear; but let it be silent and still, then the bite of every little insect on the body is invariably perceived, because their spirit sits there to superintend, and extends its observations to every part.

"Hence, when a person wishes to foster his spiritual energies, he must first exclude the observation of what is private and partial, and then his spirit will be in everything perspicuous and clear! but the human spirit, with the exception of what takes place in a man's own body, and with the exception of what he sees and hears, is capable of perceiving nothing; how difficult, then, is it for a spirit connected with the visible world to extend its observations; but the spirits of the invisible world are, on the contrary, acquainted with everything. If the spirit of my mind can only become acquainted with what comes in contact with my eyes and ears, hands and feet, then that which is not cognizable to the senses cannot have any communication with my spirit. If, then, I cannot extend my observations to that which is not in some connection with my body, it follows that there are many corporeal things that I cannot become acquainted with; how, then, can I become perfectly acquainted with the invisible world, and those spirits which are sacrificed to? The spirit which men have when they are born into the world has its origin in the Mighty Infinite; although the Mighty Infinite has conferred a variety of forms on the myriad of things, yet there is one subtle fluid that pervades them all: as in the constitution of the human body, one subtle fluid pervades every part of it, and cannot be held not to pervade it, because the eyes and ears, the hands and feet, have different forms, and are put to different uses. The intelligent man, aware of this, ought not, because of the bodily members, to say, this my body sustains no connection with heaven and earth, men and things. If, indeed, there were no connection, how is it that the body of each individual must depend on the sustenance of heaven and earth, with the men and things around it, before it can become a body? It is because the one subtle fluid pervades all, that men produce and sustain each other; and since one subtle fluid pervades all, is spirit alone to be held as not pervading all? But the pervadings of this incorporeal and invisible spirit cannot be comprehended in the mind, unless that mind be kept perfectly still; and such matters are with difficulty perceived and believed, unless a man's contemplations are deep, and his mind unprejudiced and intelligent. Spirit may be held to be the most mysterious of all things: without haste, it is rapid; without moving, it arrives at its point: it cannot be intercepted by intervening objects; it can penetrate both metals and minerals, and cannot be described as far or near; it can mount up to the heights of heaven; it can dive into the depths of the earth. Men, being impeded by matter and form, cannot conceive how spirit can associate with spirit; amongst these latter, connections and separations are of a nature not to be fathomed by human thought; but when men do not foster their mental energies, their spirits will not even be able fully to blend with their own bodies, but will be subverted and overturned, which is what is called in common discourse losing one's senses. Sometimes, also, the spirit does not retain its seat, as in the case of one foolish, drunk, or dreaming; and how can one expect, with this human spirit thus diminished, to hold intercourse with the spirits of heaven, and earth, and all things?

"The results of nourishing our spirits are, that we regain our original perfect nature; and that which was decreed by heaven to bestow, we make our own: it is no longer necessary to talk of a renewed cultivation of such virtuous nature, for such virtuous nature is already firmly established. This is the way in which Láu-tsz' adopted the method of nourishing the spirit, to cause men to revert to their originally virtuous nature, and connect themselves with that which heaven had decreed to bestow, without men's being themselves aware of it. Some people ask how it is, that when the affairs of human life are so multifarious and ever-changing, we can never succeed in nourishing our mental energies;—not knowing that these affairs do not come of their own accord, but are constantly brought on by men themselves. Should there be any matters that come upon us without our intervention, we should just treat them in a natural and unconstrained manner, without attempting to force them. When in trouble we should go through our troubles, and when in poverty we should bear our poverty, leaving the matter of life and death to the disposal of Providence, and not allowing our minds to be moved by anything that respects life or death. When such things are incapable of annoying and moving our hearts, how can they annoy the spirit of our minds? Mencius said, 'A man of resolution does not disturb himself about being buried in a ditch, and a brave man cares not if he lose his head.' When we can compose our minds in the most distressed and trying circumstances and affairs, we shall be able to go through the dangerous passes of life as if they were an even path. It is only because men in the present life are desirous of contending with their circumstances: when poor, they are not content to remain poor, but adopt schemes for seeking after riches; when low, they are not content to continue low, but speculate in search of honours. Moreover, when they are rich, they aim to become more rich; and when noble, they aspire to be more noble; and thus meet with all sorts of annoyances and disappointments, the whole of which they bring upon themselves.

"If, now, we could but leave all these matters alone, and when poverty comes, let it come; when degradation assails, let it assail; being content under every circumstance, what would then prevent us from nourishing the spirit of our minds? But we have not been able thus to nourish our spirits; could we really succeed in so doing, then we should find no difficulty in discerning every matter in the world, in whatever direction the light of our minds might be brought to shine. Water may dash down a steep place, without having any intention of so doing; and the white clouds may gather around the summit of a hill, without designing so to do. In like manner we may keep our minds in perfect stillness, although daily engaged in the arena of public strife. In this way the three religions [of China] may be united in one, by merely cultivating stillness; and then our spirits may be nourished, our virtuous natures regained, and we unite in virtue with heaven and earth. Some men object, and say, it is easy to talk about being still, but it is difficult to accomplish it, not knowing that the fault lies in men's unwillingness to remain still."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

WEDNESDAY, April 2, 1851.

THE outer circles of the mighty movement which has agitated the whole kingdom on the subject of the "papal aggression,"—realizing some of the most remarkable demonstrations of public opinion recorded in our annals,—have disturbed, though with gentler undulations, the colonies and British India. Those distant possessions share a portion of the anxiety felt at home regarding the issue of the contest betwixt a powerful empire and "a poor priest," whose spiritual artillery and army of "regulars," however, render him no despicable adversary in the peculiar question at issue in the conflict.

The overwhelming majority of 343 out of 438 members, in the House of Commons, in favour of the second reading of the Ecclesiastical Titles Assumption Bill, which affirms its principle, is a declaration, more decisive than was probably anticipated, of the opinion of that branch of the Legislature. The merits of the specific measure proposed by the Government can scarcely be said to have been in controversy during the many nights of debate; when incidentally adverted to, the Bill, diluted as it is proposed to be, experienced little more mercy from many of its supporters than from its bitterest opponents. The precise scheme by which the object in view is to be effected, will be the subject of an equally protracted, perhaps a more angry, discussion at a future stage: the points really determined on the memorable morning of the 26th March, 1851, were,—that the sovereign authority in this country shall not be set at defiance by the Pope; that the recent acts of the Pontiff and his delegates were aggressions upon that authority, and that Parliament could resist those aggressions without violating the principle of religious liberty or the spirit of the Relief Act of 1829.

In reading the massive debates in Parliament upon this subject, and the discussions at public meetings throughout the country, men of sober judgment and plain understandings must be forced upon the painful reflection, how difficult it is to discover truth! Amongst Protestants, statesmen of the highest reputation, lawyers of the deepest learning, scholars who have thoroughly investigated the points in dispute, men of the same creeds and shades of religious opinion, upon a question in which the spirit of party exerts comparatively but a faint influence, entertain the most discordant views. Whether there has been any real aggression at all is a point which, it might be supposed, could be very easily ascertained. But it is not so; there are persons, reputed to be good Protestants, who adopt the Romish argument, that the establishment of a hierarchy in this country by the Pope, and the appointment of bishops with territorial titles and sees, without the consent of the Sovereign, whose placet or exequatur is indispensable in all Roman Catholic countries, is no aggression or insult, but a merely spiritual act, necessary for the development of spiritual functions. Assuming, however, that there have been an aggression and an insult, it seems necessarily to follow that they should be repressed; but here again doctors differ, some of them advising that they should be disregarded, as beneath the notice of a great nation. Then amongst the advocates of repression, which comprehend a large majority of the House of Commons and of the nation, how various are the schemes! Negotiation, remonstrance, war, are preferred by some, as better calculated to meet the emergency, and more dignified, than legislation, which is a kind of passive resistance, they say, suited rather to the weak than the powerful. And who shall tell the infinite varieties of sentiment which discriminate those who believe that legislation is the proper mode of dealing with this species of hostility? Different persons, arriving at the same result, reach it not only by different, but sometimes antagonistical, processes of reasoning.

Much of this confusion and incongruity, as well as of the perplexity which darkens the whole question, may be attributed to its mixed properties, the author of the aggression,—the Pope,—being a temporal prince, as well as the spiritual head of the Romish Church; and the act itself having likewise a two-fold aspect, temporal and spiritual, between which accidents there is no distinct or sensible line of separation. We may add another, not the most insignificant, element of confusion, namely, the indefinite object which the most violent opponents of the Papal Rescript have in view,—whether simply to withstand an aggressive movement against the Sovereign and the law, or to do battle against Romanism itself. Many, we believe, who profess no hostility to the religion of Rome, and even a desire that it should enjoy all the facilities which perfect toleration would afford its teachers for the propagation of that creed, are, perhaps unconsciously, impelled in their opposition by a hope that it will check its progress. All are not equally candid with Earl Fitzwilliam. "He confessed,"—that nobleman is reported to have said in the House of Lords, on the 28th of March,—

"He did not care much for any infringement of the prerogative of the Crown, which could not practically be carried into effect; and he knew that the Roman see could not practically infringe upon the prerogatives of the Crown; neither, for the same reason, did he attach much consequence to the insult to the independence of the nation of which the Sovereign Pontiff had been guilty; but there was one point of view in which he confessed he looked upon the proceeding with uneasiness and alarm. He was satisfied that the establishment in this country of Roman Catholic sees, with territorial titles, which would be filled by what he would call territorial residents, would have a great effect in spreading the Roman Catholic religion; and it was against that he desired to guard."

The recent decision of the House of Commons having, as already observed, declared that an aggression has been committed against the Sovereign and the law, and that legislation is the most proper mode of repressing it, the conclusion seems inevitable, that it should be of the most stringent character. A mere protest is utterly insufficient. It may be difficult to devise restrictions upon encroachment that shall not interfere with toleration; but it must be remembered that the aggressor has himself placed us in this difficulty, and must not be permitted to derive any advantage from his own wrong. If the Roman Catholics were not content with the perfect religious liberty conceded to them under the Relief Act, and, exciting our reasonable jealousy, have forced us to provide barriers against what appears to us usurpation, they must not complain if our precautionary legislation should unintentionally and unavoidably retrench some small portion of the freedom of action which their clergy enjoyed before this unprovoked aggression.

As our present impression will be found an account of a visit to the ancient colony of Chinese Jews, at K'hae-fung-foo (i.e. the chief town of the K'hae-fung district), in the province of Honan, situated nearly on the parallel of 35 deg. north, and about 120 miles west of the meridian of Peking. The expedition was undertaken at the suggestion of the Jews' Society in England, with a view of establishing a mission (the expenses of which had been provided for by funds placed at the disposal of the society by Miss Cook), under the direction of the Bishop of Victoria, and was performed by two native Christians, one of them a young man who had been brought up in the London Missionary Society's school at Batavia, and who could read and write English; the other a literary graduate of Chin-keang-foo.

The existence of this singular colony was first announced to the western world by the Jesuit missionaries in China, who, in the beginning of the last century, visited K'hae-fung-foo, and collected from the Jews then living there some interesting particulars respecting their history, which, with reports of their condition, social as well as religious, their synagogue, and sacred writings, were published in various works, French and German.*

They informed Father Gaubil that 1650 years had then (1723) elapsed since they entered China from Se-yih (Central Asia), with which country they had kept up a communication for many centuries. The date of their immigration would thus be fixed at A.D. 73, or three years subsequent to the fall of Jerusalem, a fact which affords some ground for believing that the original immigrants had quitted the Holy Land immediately after the capture and destruction of their temple by the Romans. They consisted, according to the report of their descendants, of sixty-six families, of the tribes of Benjamin, Levi, and Judah. At one period they are represented to have been employed in public offices in the Chinese empire; some of them embarked in commerce at Ning-po and Hong-chow; but at the date of Father Gaubil's visit they had been reduced in rank and opulence as well as numbers, there being then only seven pure Jewish families at K'hae-fung-foo, the rest having embraced Mahomedanism. Their synagogue had been destroyed by an inundation in the year 1446, which rotted most of their books; it had been rebuilt in 1490. This building, which is described by the missionaries as resembling in form the temple of Jerusalem, is 340 feet from east to west, and 150 feet from north to south, divided into four portions, the temple (properly so called) rising in the centre, composed of, four stories. In the Holy of Holies, called in Chinese T'en-tang, or Temple of Heaven, are deposited the Pentateuch (called in Chinese Ta-king, 'great classic'), written on thirteen rolls of Chinese paper, each covered with a silken wrapper. Inscriptions in Hebrew and Chinese appeared on different parts of the edifice. The form of the Hebrew letters in the MSS., according to the missionaries, resembled the type of the old editions of the Hebrew Bible printed in Germany.*

The late visitors to these Chinese Jews, it will be seen, represent their condition as sadly deteriorated. They found many Mahomedans at K'hae-fung-foo, and very few Jews. Their temple was dilapidated, the enclosure of the synagogue broken down; and the few wretched descendants of the original colonists who still adhered to the faith of their fathers were "huddled together" in the parts of the building which remained standing, "sleeping on the bare ground, with scarcely a rag to cover them," and bartering the relics of even the sacred edifice for the support of life. The Holy Place, its interior elaborately decorated, was, however, yet intact, and the visitors were permitted to examine the rolls of the sacred writings, their account of which differs from that of the Jesuits. They describe them as twelve in number, each being about 30 feet long, by 2 or 3 feet wide, written on white sheep-skin: the paper copies had probably perished. They were permitted to bring away eight Hebrew MSS., six of which contain portions of the books of Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy, written evidently by a style, in an antique character, with points, upon thick paper. In others of the MSS. Persian words (in Hebrew characters) occur,—a fact noticed by M. de Sacy, when he examined the copies of some of the K'hae-fung-foo MSS. sent to Europe by the Jesuit missionaries,—indicating that the colonists either came immediately from Persia, or obtained their writings from thence. It is intended to have facsimiles of these MSS. engraved, and to print the journals of the two Chinese travellers.

These particulars, scanty as they are, may throw some light upon Jewish history. We may learn whether the emigrants were Karaites or Talmudists; and if a correspondence could be established with the best informed of the Jews resident at K'hae-fung-foo, further information might be obtained before the colony became extinct.

THE LATE SIR W. H. MACNAGHTEN.

The last Calcutta Review (No. 28) contains an article upon "the outbreak in Cabul and its causes," which places the conduct of the late Sir W. H. Macnaghten in a very unfavourable light, presenting in this respect a remarkable contrast to another article in the same work (No. 3), wherein that gentleman's conduct is highly eulogized, and the blame of the catastrophe is cast chiefly upon General Elphinstone, whom the last Review excuses, if not justifies!

* Amongst others, in the Notes to Brotier's Tacitus (lib. iv. c. xiii.); and Von Murr, Journ. von Kunst Geschichte, &c. (7en th.).

According to the writer of the last article, Macnaghten, actuated by ambition, arrogated a general control over the conduct of affairs, military as well as civil; and although he might, after Shah Shooja had been re-seated upon his throne, have withdrawn the British army with honour, or devolved upon the Shah the military hold of the country, he chose the alternative of governing Afghanistan by British troops in the Shah's name, and thereby "tarnished the honour and compromised the advantage of his country." The writer charges Sir William with cherishing extravagant schemes of conquest in Central Asia, and whilst calling for more troops, in the same breath vaunting the Shah's great popularity. He represents him as yielding to objections on the part of the Shah which he knew and acknowledged to be ridiculous, the vital point of having military possession of the Bala Hissar, which was essential to the security of our force; and, whilst pursuing a wavering course in respect to precautionary measures of grave moment, launching rashly upon a revolutionary experiment incompatible with the temporary occupation of the country,—namely, the destruction of the power and influence of the chiefs, who were quick to perceive the meditated blow, and became alienated from the Shah as well as his protectors. His whole course at starting, both in civil and military proceedings, is described as "dubious and inconsistent." The rising of the Khyber tribes, who had been attached to Shah Shooja, is said to have been almost the immediate result of the anomalous government established by Macnaghten, who, haunted with the fear of Russian influence, "determined to spread the web of his ever-radiating diplomacy to the shores of the Aral and the Caspian." Alarmed by Sikh intrigues, he even pressed Lord Auckland to "break with the ruler of the Punjab." Though warned by General Nott and Captain Rawlinson, from Candahar, of the false position of the British in Afghanistan, and of the dangers attending it, Macnaghten is represented as insensible of them, and of the growing disaffection to the Shah and hatred to the British. General Elphinstone the writer describes as a brave gentleman, but a tyro in Eastern warfare, and weakened by severe attacks of illness; and he insinuates that he was chosen for the post lest a person with more physical energy might have aspired "to real, not nominal, command, and this was not what either Burnes or Macnaghten desired." Upon the outbreak, the general, "long misled as to the state of feeling in the city and country, at the mercy of Macnaghten for all his political information, may be excused," the Reviewer says, "for having failed to observe the coming storm; when it burst upon the gallant but health-shattered veteran, he may be pardoned for having been taken by surprise, and for having failed, deceived both by Macnaghten and Burnes as to the real character of the revolt, on the very morning, vigorously to crush it." The writer does not deny to Sir William the quality of courage. "If Macnaghten," he says, "be culpable for the effrontery with which he sought to blind and mislead others, as well as himself, as to the feelings of the Afghan people and the state of the country, he proved free from that imbecile weakness which henceforward characterized the military leaders and their measures." But he represents him as yielding to the "puerile arguments" urged against the only wise and safe course in the emergency, the occupation of the Bala Hissar. He "nursed hopes of accomplishing by secret intrigue, and the distribution of large sums of money, that which the British arms failed to effect." The "intrigues," and "measures of a doubtful character," resorted to by Sir William, were his endeavours, in the embarrassing situation in which he was placed, to disunite the Afghan chiefs, by purchasing the aid or neutrality of some of them. This policy was greatly commended in the former article of the Review. "In the novel and anomalous position in which he was placed," says that writer, "his conduct was marked by sagacity and prudence, and there is little reason to doubt that if, at the last crisis, he had been intrusted with the supreme direction of military movements, the final catastrophe would not have occurred!" Sir William is indirectly accused in the last article of encouraging Mohun Lall to bribe persons to assassinate some of the chiefs,—a charge which is noticed and refuted, as atrocious and false, in the former article,—and when the reward was claimed for the commission of the crime, by the alleged assassination of two leaders, refusing to fulfil the promise made to the assassins; which, if any promise were made, would have been an act of sheer madness. The conduct of Macnaghten, it is said, inspired Mahomed Akbar and the chiefs with "a thorough want of confidence in his sincerity," and the conduct imputed to him, with regard to the treaty, if justly imputed, would afford reasons for their distrust; but upon this head, again, the proceedings of Sir William are vindicated in the former article of the Review. "It was to save the lives of 12,000 men," says that writer, "that he had agreed to the humiliating terms of the treaty, and he was fully justified in regarding the treaty as waste paper, when it had been violated by the chiefs in such a manner as to render it, if observed, the means of destroying, instead of saving, the troops." Now, however, it is said: "The loose manner in which the treaty was worded, and the insertion of conditions in terms so general as to render, if not their purport, their fulfilment, matter of easy cavil, afforded Macnaghten specious grounds for delay:" and, "in despair at the disgrace with which so ignoble a treaty overwhelmed himself and the British name, he clung to the faintest hope of retrieving events." The destruction of the Envoy is attributed to his own want of both sincerity and caution. His conduct, it is said, engendered suspicions in the minds of the principal sirdars that he meditated some deep design against their lives and power, and in order to test his intentions, Mahomed Akbar sent by an agent secret proposals to the Envoy, in which, on certain conditions, he undertook to seize Amin Ullah, one of the most obnoxious and powerful leaders, and, for a certain sum of money, to deliver his head. Sir William, the Reviewer says, "eagerly caught at the general proposal, disclaiming, however, in the presence of auditors,"—this parenthetical remark is significant,—"any willingness to give a price for blood, and therefore rejecting the specific offer of Amin Ullah's head, though not of his capture by treachery, in which the Envoy and the British troops were to play a conspicuous part. The distinction," the Reviewer adds, "was too nice to weigh with men conversant with the degree of scrupulousness evinced by the Envoy in the case of Abdullah Khan and Mir Musjidi,"—the two alleged victims of assassination before referred to,—"and who judged of his sincerity by the eager readiness with which he was captivated by an offer too specious to have imposed upon any man of sound thought and principle, and which involved the perfidious sacrifice of one of their own members." In the former article, it is asserted that when Akbar's agent mentioned the delivery of Amin Ullah's head, "Sir William shrank back with abhorrence:" and with respect to the rest of the proposal, that writer said: "We must confess that we can see nothing which would give the least colour of moral turpitude to his acceptance of an offer which promised him the preservation of the army." Now, however, "the deliberate faithlessness which led the Envoy to accept Mahomed Akbar's proposal sealed his doom; the worst suspicions of the confederate chiefs and their exasperated leader were confirmed, and they resolved, as no dependence could be placed on the most solemn and formal engagements, to ensnare Macnaghten in the net he was spreading for another, and to take vengeance upon him and the starving disorganized force." The murder of the Envoy is thus indirectly palliated, if not justified, upon the ground that he had violated the treaty, and, whilst negotiating with the Afghan chiefs, engaged in a treacherous plot against one of their number.

If the judgment passed upon the conduct of Sir W. Macnaghten in the early number of the Review be, as we think it is, too indulgent to his errors, the sentence pronounced in the article under consideration is most harsh and unjust. That these discordant criticisms should have appeared in the same work, without any attempt to reconcile them or to explain their discrepancies, is rather extraordinary.

Since the above remarks were written, we have received the following letter from Major Hough:—

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

Sir,—The supposed reply of Sir W. Macnaghten to Mohun Lall, on the 1st December, 1841, published in the Calcutta Review, is contrasted with the words written, it is stated, to Mohun Lall on the 13th November, 1841:—"I have received your letters of this morning's date, and highly approve of all you have done." The question is, if Sir William did write to Mohun Lall, what was the nature and purport of his (Sir William's) letter to him, and of Mohun Lall's to Sir William? Conolly wrote to Mohun Lall on the 5th November, to get the Shiabs to attack the Sunnis. On the 11th November, he again wrote about the bodies of the murdered officers (Sir Alexander and Lieut. C. Burnes, and Lieut. Broadfoot), offering Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 2,000 for their bodies (see Review, pp. 366, 367, 368), "and to distribute as far as Rs. 50,000 in aid of the Shah's cause." These three objects he may have approved of; but it is illogical and unjust to infer that he had written to cause the heads of the chiefs to be struck off, or to sanction the act, and approve of it when executed.

The public will take nothing less than the letters duly proved to have been written by Sir William. The case admits of no inference, such as that the position of Conolly warrants the presumption that he would not have written such letters without due authority. The authority must be proved.

Yours,

Oriental Club, March 25.

W. HOUGH.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS, MARCH 4.

Transportation to the Australian Colonies.—Lord Monteaule, in presenting a petition, numerously signed, from the inhabitants of Van Diemen's Land, complaining of the suffering to which that colony was subjected by the continued influx of convicts, though the Government had some time since given a promise that no more should be sent thither, acknowledged that the difficulty had been augmented as much by the action of Parliament as by any acts of the Colonial-office. Parliament, not considering the consequences which one step would have upon another, had from time to time made such sudden and unexpected alterations of system, that the colonists were always placed at a disadvantage. Indeed, the effects upon the economical and moral condition of the colony had been such as to warrant the loudest complaint. The population of Van Diemen's Land was 70,000, of whom 32,173 were free; thus showing that considerably more than one-half were convicts. The House, he said, could not but remember the case of the Cape of Good Hope, and it was to be feared that the example then set might produce bad results in other cases. Indeed, there was reason to apprehend that the people of Van Diemen's Land might be led,—not following the example of the Cape, indeed,—to take such steps as would render the future introduction of convicts into any part of that colony utterly impossible.

Earl Grey denied that any pledge had been given to the inhabitants of Van Diemen's Land that the transportation of convicts to that colony should entirely cease. What the Government had promised was, that convicts should not be sent thither until they had been reformed by spending a considerable portion of their sentence in England, and this promise it had been the intention of the Government rigidly to fulfil; but its plans had been deranged by an address to the Crown, passed by the House of Commons, praying that a large number of convicts might be at once removed from this country. He thought this measure was adopted by the other House very rashly and very inconsiderately, and he could not acquit the Government of the day of not having called upon the House of Commons, in adopting that measure, to vote the money that was necessary to make arrangements in Van Diemen's Land for so large a number of convicts. He regretted the necessity that existed for sending so large a number of convicts to Van Diemen's Land, but he firmly believed that that necessity would not much longer exist; for, while his noble friend had spoken of a strong feeling on the part of the colonists of Van Diemen's Land against the introduction of convicts, he did not advert to the prevalence of different feelings among other colonists. In Western Australia there was an unanimous desire that we should begin to send convicts there. In the northern portion of New South Wales, there was also an unanimous feeling in favour of convicts being sent over, as they had found the services of this class of persons exceedingly useful as stockmen and shepherds. He was not surprised that this was the case, as he believed that the prosperity and welfare of the colony depended on their obtaining a supply of convict-labour. The funds by which free emigrants were sent out were limited, and, when they arrived, there was no means of enforcing their residence in those distant and remote parts of the colony where the production of wool was carried on. Ticket-of-leave men might be required to reside in those districts where they were most wanted. And what had been the result of this system? The Governor of New South Wales stated that, of 1,618 convicts sent to New South Wales between the 1st of June, 1849, and the 30th of April, 1850, having tickets of leave, most of them having been a considerable number of months in the colony, there were only forty whom it had been found necessary to punish for misconduct. They had been trained in this country to useful labour, and had proved an acquisition to the colony. The inhabitants of New South Wales, when they calmly viewed the working of the system, would, he was persuaded, see it was for their interest that convicts should be sent to parts of that colony. He agreed that convicts ought not to be sent to Sydney, Melbourne, or any of the more considerable towns, or even more thickly-peopled country districts; but they might be sent with immense advantage to large tracts which were now becoming covered with sheep. The Port Phillip members, who would in future be removed from the Legislature of New South Wales and sit in that of Victoria, voted as a body against receiving convicts at all, while of the New South Wales representatives a majority were in favour of the reception of convicts. With respect to Van Diemen's Land, the latest accounts he had received, while they showed the existence of a strong feeling against the reception of convicts, contained, on the other hand, the clearest evidence that the colony was rising, perhaps slowly, from the series of depressions under which it had laboured.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PRESENTATIONS TO HER MAJESTY.—The Queen held a levee on the 26th March, at which were presented,—

Sir Charles Napier, on his return from India, by the Duke of Wellington.

Lieut.-col. F. Abbot, C.B., on appointment as Lieutenant-Governor of Addiscombe Military Seminary; by Lord Hardinge.

Mr. A. Bellasis, Bombay C.S., on return from India; by Lord Broughton.

Mr. W. H. Brodhurst, on return from India; by Mr. L. Wigram, M.P.

Ens. De Bourbel, E. I. Co.'s Engineers; by Col. Sir F. Smith.

Ens. Vaughan, of the same; by the same.

Capt. P. Grant, on return from India, and on appointment as A.D.C. to Her Majesty; by Lord Gough.

Capt. E. Kaye, on return from the Punjab; by Lord Hardinge.

Capt. Ouvre, on return from India; by Lord C. Manners.

Col. Ovens, on return from abroad; by Lord Broughton.

Lieut. P. Remington, on return from India; by the same.

BATTLES OF THE PUNJAB.—A tablet in monumental brass, to the memory of the officers of Lord Hardinge's staff who fell in the battles of the Punjab, has been recently made by Mr. J. W. Archer. The brass is entirely of oriental design, and is composed of a canopy embattled and worked in sunk panels (by a method of the artist's own production), which contain ornament in geometrical figures, and the word "Moodkee" upon a ground of colour. A figure of an angel upon a ground of deep azure and stars displays the inscription. The base is composed of elephants entwining their trunks with the flowers of the lotus, upon a ground of diaper, bright flowers upon green, a bracket completing the design. The brass is intended to be inlaid in Purbeck stone, and will be sent to India.—Builder.

LORD GOUCH, the Limerick Chronicle states, has been put in possession of the princely mansion and lands of Killymoon, in the county of Tyrone, Ireland, the estate of the late Colonel Stewart, and which had passed into the Encumbered Estates Court a few months previous to the death of its former possessor. The present rental is estimated at 4,500*l.* a year, but a quarter of a century back it was ninefold this amount, and the purchase-money, according to the Chronicle, was 91,000*l.*

CHINA TRADE.—In reply to a communication from the Manchester Commercial Association, regarding the attempt of the Chinese authorities to revive the old Co-hong monopoly, in violation of the treaty of Nanking, Lord Palmerston has intimated that instructions have been forwarded to Governor Bonham, at Hong-Kong, to require that it shall be put an end to. With regard also to some smuggling practices lately carried on at Shanghai by certain British parties, to the detriment of the Chinese revenue, and of which complaint was made by the Association, on account of the injurious effect such a system is calculated to have upon the business and character of the fair trader, it has been notified that suggestions with a view to the effectual suppression of the evil are at present under consideration.

CANTEEN.

EAST-INDIA COMPANY'S BARRACKS, WARLEY, NEAR BRENTWOOD, ESSEX.

East-India House, London, 19th March, 1851.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the CANTEEN in the above-mentioned Barracks is to be LET, upon the following Conditions, from the 26th May, 1851, to the 25th May, 1854.

No person but of unexceptionable character, nor any person who will not undertake bona fide to reside in the Canteen, and conduct the business thereof in his own person, will be approved; and two sureties will be required for the regular payment of the rent, and of all sums which may become due in respect of the said Canteen, and for the due performance of the several conditions and stipulations of the indenture of lease. The revenue or other licenses to be paid by the tenant.

The person whose proposal shall be accepted (and his sureties) must execute an indenture of lease, and covenants relating thereto; the particulars whereof may be known by applying at this House, or at the Office of the Commandant of the Company's Depot, Warley Barracks, Essex.

The names of two respectable persons, with their Christian names, professions, and places of abode, who will join the tenant in executing the indenture of lease, as his sureties, must be inserted in the proposals, and no proposal will be attended to which is not accompanied by the written consent of the persons named to be the proposer's sureties. The tenant is to pay the full value of the stamps on the indenture of lease upon executing the same, and it is to be understood that the East-India Company will not undertake to procure the tenant a license.

Sealed proposals, addressed to the Secretary, East-India House, London, with the words, "Tender for Canteen, Warley Barracks," written on the outside cover, will be received at this House, at or before 11 o'clock of the morning of Wednesday, the 16th April, 1851, after which hour any proposal received cannot be noticed.

By the Mutiny Act, Canteens are not liable to have troops billeted on them.

East-India House, 19th March, 1851.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the Court of Directors of the East-India Company will receive Tenders from parties willing to contract for the supply of the undermentioned articles, for the use of their Depot at Warley Barracks, Brentwood, Essex, viz.—

COALS, CANDLES.

Particulars and conditions of the Contract may be learnt on application at the Military Department, East-India House, Leadenhall Street, London; or at the office of the Commandant of the Company's Depot at Warley.

Sealed proposals, addressed to the Secretary, East-India House, London, with the words "Tenders for Coals," "Candles" (as the case may be), "for Warley Barracks," written on the outside cover, will be received at this House, on or before 11 o'clock on Wednesday, the 16th day of April next, after which hour no proposal can be received.

JAMES C. MELVILL, Secretary

East-India House, 26th March, 1851.

Assurances are granted upon the lives of persons in every profession and station in life, and for every part of the world, with the exception of the Western Coast of Africa within the Tropics.

The Rates of Premiums are constructed upon sound principles with reference to every Colony, and, by payment of a moderate addition to the Home Premium, in case of increase of risk, persons assured in this office may change from one climate to another, without forfeiting their Policies.

FOUR-FIFTHS of the PROFITS are divided amongst the Assured.

JOSEPH CARTWRIGHT BRETTELL, Secretary.

HAILEYBURY COLLEGE.—A Married Clergyman, M.A. of Oxford, who has long prepared for the preliminary examination with marked success, will have vacancies after Christmas for pupils above 13 and under 17 years of age. His system of instruction ensures the most rapid progress. The judicious course of study required by the H.E.I.C. of candidates for Haileybury is equally desirable for general students, but in case of such applicants, the recommendation of a Director or Member of Parliament is required.

This Society offers a lower and more economical scale of Premiums for Life Assurance than hitherto demanded by the established Offices in India.

Annual Premium for assuring 1,000 rupees:—

CIVIL.			MILITARY AND NAVAL.
Age.	With Profits.	Without Profits.	Age.	With Profits.	Without Profits.
20	Rs. 31	Rs. 31	20	Rs. 38	Rs. 35
30	36	35	30	44	41
40	49	45	40	53	49
50	63	59	50	66	61
60	82	77	60	84	79

All holders of Policies in India on the Profit scale, who may have paid five annual premiums, will be entitled, at the expiration of the fifth year, to a year's profit, calculated on the average of the preceding five years; such profit to be paid in cash, or to go in diminution of the future premiums payable, or to be added to the sum assured by the policy, at the option of the holder, after the calculation of the profits shall have been made in London.

After the expiration of 1851, the profits will be declared annually, and the payers of five complete annual premiums be regularly entitled to a participation therein, with a like option as to the mode of application.

Parties assured in India for Life shall, on their return to England for a permanency, and on the first half-yearly premium becoming due, be entitled to come upon the English rates of premium, and be placed under the rules and conditions of the Society there obtaining.

All parties assured for Life, or for terms other than for Life, whatever the number of payments, or the permanency or otherwise of their residence in Europe, shall, after completing a full year from the date of their quitting India, and on the first half-yearly premium thereafter becoming due, be entitled to a reduction of their premium to the English rates, such reduced rates being continued during their further residence in Europe.

Notices of Assignments of Policies will be duly registered at the Office of the Secretaries.

The Society also grants ENDOWMENTS and DEFERRED ANNUITIES for India, the Tables for which, with full information, may be had at the Office of the Family Endowment Society, No. 12, Chatham Place; or at the Office of the Secretaries in Calcutta, Messrs. GORDON, STUART, and Co.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 9th of May, 1849, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums. This will be found a liberal reduction if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premiums.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
20		£1,000	£19 6 8	£11 2 4

TO LADIES.—The high and universal celebrity which ROWLAND'S KALYDOR continues to maintain as an active, yet mild and soothing, extirpator of all impurities of the skin, is, during the period of Spring, most pleasingly evinced. This preparation, eminently balsamic, restorative, and invigorating, is equally distinguished for safety in application, as for unfailing efficacy in eradicating all redness, tan, pimples, spots, freckles, discolorations, and other cutaneous visitations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek, and the softness and delicacy which it induces on the hands and arms, render it indispensable to every toilet. To ladies during the period of nursing, and as a wash for infants, it cannot be too strongly recommended. Gentlemen, after shaving, will find it allay all irritation and tenderness of the skin, and render it soft, smooth, and pleasant. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, for the growth, and for preserving, improving, and beautifying the human hair. Price 3s. 6d. and 7s.; family bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

BECKWITH and SON, GUN-MAKERS to the Hon.

East-India Company, 58, SKINNER STREET, SNOW HILL, LONDON.
The excellent shooting of Beckwith's Rifles is established by upwards of fifty years' experience. B. and Son being manufacturers, they are enabled to offer Double-barrel Rifles, suitable for the Colonies, at very low prices, and warranted to shoot well. Double and Single-Barrel Fowling-pieces, Pistols, &c., of all descriptions.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.

SCURVY, LEPROSY, SCROFULA, and all DISEASES of the SKIN, can be cured by HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS. The heaviness, weariness, dejection of spirits, and other oppressions, usually attendant on those who suffer from disease of the skin, are speedily removed by the use of Holloway's Ointment and Pills. The efficacy of these medicines in improving the bad habit of body, and in curing complaints of this distressing nature, stands unrivalled; and in many parts abroad, where the malady is so prevalent, the cures are wonderful. The purifying properties of the Pills, and the peculiar effect the Ointment has on the skin, render them superior to every other remedy.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

VARICOSE VEINS, WEAKNESS, FRACTURES, SPRAINS, &c.
HUXLEY'S SURGICAL CAOUTCHOUC ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE-CAPS, &c., are now daily patronized by all the leading members of the profession. Their superiority over every other fabric for artificial support is admitted by all who inspect them. They afford an equal, comforting, and permanent pressure on every portion of the limb, and are drawn on with the facility of an ordinary stocking. H. and Co. guarantee a comfort and support hitherto unknown in any other form of bandage. It is well known that all kinds of Surgical Stockings lately used have a tendency to impede the free and healthy action of the muscles, thereby producing relaxation and great diminution of the limb. Only to be obtained at HUXLEY'S Persian Shirt Warehouse, 5, Vere Street, Cavendish Square.

EAST-INDIA AGENCY.

C. R. THOMPSON & Co., WINCHESTER HOUSE,
OLD BROAD STREET, LONDON,
And 10, ORIENTAL PLACE, SOUTHAMPTON.

The following are the objects to which the Agency is more particularly devoted:—

TO COMMISSION and Agency Business generally, whether intrusted to them by Civil or Military Officers of the Queen's or East-India Company's Services, or by Regiments, they give prompt and careful personal attention.

THE SUPERINTENDENCE of Outfits of every kind, securing Passages, shipping and insuring Baggage and Goods of every description, for all persons proceeding to India, or of other part of the East, either by the Overland Route, via Marseilles or Southampton, or by the Sea Voyage.

THE RECEIPT of Letters from or for India or elsewhere, and their transmission by the first opportunity.

THE DESPATCH, from our London Offices of Parcels, for all parts of India, China, Ceylon, &c., by the Overland Route, on the 17th of each month; as well as the clearing and forwarding from Southampton of Passengers, Baggage, and Parcels, arriving home by the Steamers.

THE EXECUTION, on the best terms, of Orders of every description from India, especially those for Wines and Spirits, of which they keep in their Cellars a choice collection of every variety, expressly for their Indian Customers.

THE RECEPTION of the Wives and Children of Civil and Military Officers arriving from India, the Clearance of their Baggage, and its despatch to their destinations, and the placing of Children at Schools, whereat, according to the instructions and wishes of their Parents, the best education and training will be secured to them. The Receipt of Remittances for them while at home, and payment of Bills on their account.

THE RECEIPT also of Civil and Military Pay, Pensions, Annuities, Dividends, &c., by Power of Attorney; with the Execution of any other Business at the India House, Bank of England, or elsewhere.

Drafts and Letters of Credit on Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, granted for large or small sums.

Remittances, or reference for payment, will be necessary from those who have no open account with them.

EMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION.

IMMIGRATION being much required in AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, &c., and as the supposed expense of an OUTFIT often prevents individuals emigrating, S. W. SILVER and Co., CLOTHIERS, OUTFITTERS, and CONTRACTORS having a large interest in maintaining in those Colonies, have been advised to make known that they can supply a comfortable OUTFIT, including Bedding, for MALE or FEMALE Emigrants, from Four Pounds (net) upwards, or less (Two Pounds if needful), and for Children in proportion, at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN (opposite the London Tavern), where lists will be given on application.

S. W. S. & Co., being the makers of nearly every article in all the Outfits they supply, and as one of their objects is to promote EMIGRATION, they neither receive from Agents, or pay the too usual commission to any person introducing Passengers to be fitted out, so that the Passage and Outfit may be procured at the least possible expense; but they will, on application, advise Passengers how to obtain the most economic passage to the Colonies. They have a Representative in every Australian Colony, to whom they ship Clothing monthly; thus they would forward small parcels free of expense.

NAVAL and MILITARY OFFICERS, MIDSHIPMEN, CADETS, CIVILIANS, LADIES, &c., are outfitted as heretofore, at the CARLIN-PASSENGER OUTFITTING Warehouse, Nos. 66 and 67, CORNHILL (the Emigration Outfitting being exclusively at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN), LONDON, and each branch at ST. GEORGE'S CRESCENT, LIVERPOOL.

EAST-INDIA UNITED SERVICE AGENCY,
53, CHARING CROSS, and 25, SPRING GARDENS.

MAJOR R. D. WHITE (twenty-nine years in the Bengal Army) will be happy to receive gentlemen connected with India and the Colonies, or attend to their written communications.

Passages secured by Sea or overland; Houses or Apartments engaged; Regimental Messes; Wines and Spirits; Outfits, &c., supplied; and every description of Agency business transacted.

No charge for subscription to the Agency or Rooms, but every information furnished.

OVERLAND PARCELS AND PACKAGES at very reduced rates to INDIA, Ceylon, and China, 17th of every month. Periodicals from 1s., and parcels from 5s., upwards; also goods and parcels by steam and sailing vessels to all parts of the globe with economy, punctuality, and despatch. Passages engaged, baggage shipped, insurances effected, and fullest information given. Circulars of the routes via Southampton, Marseilles, and Trieste, gratis.—GEO. W. WHEATLEY and Co. (late Waghorn and Co.), Oriental and General Agents, 156, Leadenhall Street, and Universal Office, Regent Circus.

APPOINTMENTS TO INDIA and the COLONIES.—

Cadets, Assistant-Surgeons, and others appointed to India, Officers joining their Regiments, and all those who have or who are expecting Appointments to India, China, or to any other of the Colonies, may obtain Detailed Lists of the necessary Outfit for every appointment, full particulars of the Overland Route to India, Rates of Passage-Money, Allowance of Baggage, &c., on application to Messrs. THRESHER and GLENNY, East India and General Outfitters, 152, Strand, London. The only house in the kingdom where THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE WAISTCOAT can be procured.

THE BEST INDIAN CURRY POWDER,
UNEQUALLED FOR GENUINE FLAVOUR,

In 1 lb. Bottles, 3s. 6d.; $\frac{1}{2}$ lb., 2s. 3d., and $\frac{1}{4}$ lb., 1s. 6d.; or 7 lbs. for 21s.

INDIAN CURRY SAUCE, of superior quality.—This novel and piquant Sauce, now introduced to the English public for the first time, is peculiarly adapted for Steaks, Chops, Game, Fish, Cold Meats, Hash, &c. The addition of a little of this Sauce, in cases where a curry cannot be procured, will prove to connoisseurs a valuable accompaniment.

DELHI CHUTNEE, TAPONIAN SAUCE, and all other Condiments, from Calcutta direct.

KIDSTON'S MECHANICAL LEECH.

WM. KIDSTON and Co., 18, Bishopsgate Street Without, London, in directing the attention of the medical profession to their newly-invented instrument, termed "Kidston's Mechanical Leech," think it would be superfluous and presumptuous to make any comment in its behalf, further than drawing their attention to the testimonials in its favour, published in the "Lancet" of September 28, and in the Pharmaceutical Journal for October.

Full instructions for use will accompany the instruments. Price per set of instruments,—i.e. three "Leeches," or Vacuum Glasses, with Puncturing Instrument electro plated, in neat morocco case, complete,—£2. 5s.

ORIENTAL LANGUAGES.

HINDUSTANI, PERSIAN, ARABIC, SANSKRIT, &c., Taught, on Moderate Terms, at No. 58, Burton Crescent, from 10 A.M. to 1 P.M., by DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D., Professor of Oriental Languages in the King's College, London; Member of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland; Member of the Asiatic Society of Paris, and Author of the following Works, just published, on the HINDUSTANI and PERSIAN LANGUAGES.

A DICTIONARY, HINDUSTANI-ENGLISH

AND ENGLISH-HINDUSTANI.

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.

FROM THE "FRIEND OF INDIA," published at Serampore.

"The present volume, by Dr. Forbes, we regard as an inestimable contribution to our Oriental literature, and worthy of a more extended notice than can give to such a work. To compose a lexicon of the Hindustani tongue, suited to the present advanced state of this and kindred studies, demands in its author an uncommon share of learning and critical sagacity,—that he be cautious, well practised in analysis and arrangement, with ability to assign to secondary and figurative meanings a due position, a philosophical classification under their proper themes. To this part of the task Dr. Forbes has brought rare qualifications, many years' experience, great aptness in teaching the Oriental tongues, much tact with respect to the kind and degree of help required to their thorough mastery. He has already done good service; his former works have stimulated many to acquire that knowledge which is essential to an efficient discharge of the various offices of trust and responsibility of every Indian resident. To say that it is an entirely new work would be to claim for it an equivocal character; but we do say it is a matchless production of its kind, every way calculated to sustain its author's well-earned reputation. The plan and principal authorities are fully detailed in the preface, to which we refer our readers; the classical works have been diligently explored; the more modern and valuable works of Thompson, Herklot, Cox, and H. M. Elliot, have been laid under contribution for particular terms and local usage; the aim has been to compile a thoroughly usable and economical book. The words are given in alphabetical order; the leading word, and the meaning of which it, its derivatives and compounds, are susceptible, are given with great care;—in a word, if condensation and definiteness, if due distinction between the provinces of a grammarian and lexicographer, if to avoid faults, to reject things of a doubtful utility, to supply deficiencies, and to do all this with a determination that typography, paper, and price shall be unexceptionable,—if these in combination be a recommendation to an author and his work, then Dr. Forbes's Dictionary is fully worthy of the patronage of the patrons and students of Hindustani literature. We have to add, for we must not omit to mention, that it contains a second part, or a reversed dictionary—a very valuable companion indeed."

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE North-west, or Afghan, frontier of our Punjab territories continues to be the only part of our Eastern dominions where the embers of disorder are unextinguished. Bunnoo, "a lovely country of Eastern Afghanistan," as it is represented by Major Edwardes, has been the scene of a skirmish with the Wuzerees, who, according to the same authority, had resigned their independence, and consented to pay tribute to the British Government! The rear-guard of the 2nd Punjab Infantry, consisting of only fifty sepoy and fourteen sowars, repulsed the attack of not less than 300 of this "brave and powerful" tribe, horse and foot. The regiment was marching from Nurree to Bunnoo, when, firing being heard in the rear, Lieutenant Eckford was sent back to make the necessary dispositions, and found that the enemy had made a dash, in the hope of carrying off the baggage; but the little party had shown a firm front. Lieutenant Eckford ordered the sowars to advance right and left on the enemy's flanks, and, throwing a few files in front as skirmishers, moved on through the pass. The enemy, however, made for the hills, their horses climbing the steep paths like goats. When they had obtained a considerable elevation, they halted, and prepared to receive the expected rush of our tooops; but the latter were too wary to fall into the trap. Having defeated the object of the attack, the rear guard were ordered to rejoin the head-quarters of the regiment, which they effected with the loss of a sowar's horse. "The mode of dealing with these tribes effectually," observes the Bombay Telegraph, "is yet to be imagined: regular operations in the field they laugh at; but a well-organized horse-patrol, stationed at proper intervals in small fortified towns amongst the passes, and supported by the troops at Kohat, Peshawar, and Attock, might, if organized on the footing of a police, prove successful in checking their depredations."

The Affreedees have made a dastardly attempt at murder near Peshawur. It appears that, on the evening of the 19th February, Miss Curling, daughter of Dr. Curling, superintending surgeon at Peshawur, was taking her evening ride, accompanied by Captain F. Grantham, of H. M.'s 68th regiment, when they were suddenly attacked near a village by four or five men, who compelled the lady to dismount, and on resistance being made by Captain Grantham, wounded that officer severely in six or seven places. The horses were seized and carried off, and the robbers made good their escape. Miss Curling returned to cantonments on foot, and gave the alarm; a guard together with a palankeen were sent out to bring Captain Grantham into camp, when it was found necessary to amputate one of his hands at the wrist. For some time but faint hopes were entertained of his recovery, but it is thought he will survive his severe injuries. It is said that this occurred within two miles of the quarter-guard of the 71st N.I., and close to a village where no doubt the villains had been lurking. "It is high time," the Delhi Gazette observes, "some steps were taken towards checking the depredations of these lawless villains; but, unless they are treated as the barbarians they prove themselves to be, we have little hope of security for our unfortunate countrymen at Peshawur. We have heard from various quarters of the danger existing there after nightfall; people never retire to rest without being well armed, and those who are in the habit of dining out send their beds, as it is not safe to return home."

The Calcutta Englishman is of opinion that,

"Had Sir Charles Napier been allowed to take his own measures with the hill people, the affair would have been long ago settled, but the government, it seems, fancied that the eccentric Commander had a longing for an expedition to Cabul, and were very jealous of trusting him out of sight. The hill tribes must either be conciliated or subdued; no middle course can be pursued either honourably or safely. If they have been deprived of long-established privileges by the extension of the British rule, they ought to have restitution, or, if that cannot be given, compensation. If, on the other hand, they are mere plunderers, trusting to the strength of their fastnesses for impunity, they must be put down at any cost."

The Gazette has every reason to believe that final arrangements have been made to secure a free communication between Kohat and Peshawur. A letter from that quarter mentions that, although it is not safe to send anything the thieves might fancy worth stealing, there is no real danger, and the passage to and fro is open. The Lahore Chronicle, however, reports, that two grass-cutters of Daly's horse had been cut up, near Kohat, and their tattoos carried off by some Baizootes, and that an ineffectual attempt was made by a party of the cavalry to cut them off as they went through a pass.

The 66th Goorkhas are reported to have arrived at Peshawur, and will have an opportunity of proving their mettle.

The Mofussilite has the following paragraph, the accuracy of which is not, however, relied upon:—

"We understand that communications have at length been opened between the Governor-General and Dost Mahomed Khan, the object of which is the surrender to the British authorities of the treacherous Affghan, Sultan Mahomed Khan, who betrayed Lieut. Col. Lawrence and his family into the hands of Chutter Sing, at the commencement of the late campaign. Notwithstanding the relationship existing between Dost Mahomed and the traitor, good hopes are entertained of the Governor-General's demands being acceded to—in which case amicable relations may be once more established between the Affghans and the British Government."

Intelligence from Nepal announces the timely detection of a conspiracy to assassinate the late envoy to this country, Jung Bahadoor. The murder was to have been committed on the 17th February, as the minister was on his way to the durbar. The conspirators were the Mahila Sahib, the maharajah's brother, General Budea Nar Sing, his brother; General Jaie Bahadoor, the cousin of his intended victim, together with Kurban Khetree, one of the chiefs who accompanied the minister to Europe. The plot was discovered through the treachery of one of the conspirators near midnight on the 16th, and the plotters, finding too much known for concealment, confessed the rest. The Rajah's brothers were dissatisfied with the jaghires which had been assigned them, and the minister's brother was induced to join them, having been detected in accepting bribes. The minister himself behaved with the utmost coolness and determination throughout, and next day rode up to the Residency with a pair of Purdie's pistols, brought out with him, stuck in his belt, and gave an account of all that had happened. One account states that Jung Bahadoor had been charged by Kurban Khetree with having lost caste by drinking the wine of England; that, to punish the slanderer, Jung forced down his throat, in the presence of the soldiers, a quantity of forbidden liquor, and that this led to the conspiracy.

The Governor-General was travelling up the left bank of the Indus: he was to be at Attock on the 4th March, and at Peshawur on the 9th or 10th. Private letters from his travelling camp state that his health is not good, and it is surmised that he will retire to Simla almost immediately.

Sir W. and Lady Gomm were at Delhi on the 8th of March, where entertainments on a grand scale had been offered them by the heads of European and native society.

The trial of Jotee Persaud, which was to have come on at Agra on the 24th February, was again postponed at the instance of the defendant, who gave in a long list of witnesses. Those on the part of the prosecution number about 200. Government have decided on nominating an officer to conduct the prosecution.

Major Kennedy and Mr. Turnbull have returned from their surveying excursion up the right bank of the Ganges, with an impression that the best route for the Bengal railway is to the river at Rajmahal, and thence up the valley to Mirzapore, rather than by the direct line through the jungles and hills to the last-mentioned place. Major Kennedy is compelled by the state of his health to leave India.

The China journals represent that the insurrection in the Kwang-tung and Kwang-se provinces, which had been supposed to be at an end, on the contrary, had attained such a head as even to create alarm for the dynasty, verifying the observations made in a former Mail.* It appears that the editors of the English journals were purposely misinformed upon the subject by the Chinese authorities. The Friend of China states that the disturbances were raging with aggravated fierceness; that, barely sixty miles from Canton, the insurgents were assembled in great force, their avowed object being the subversion of the dynasty.

The noted pirate Chin-Apoo, who was the chief instigator of, and actor in, the murder, in February, 1849, of Lieut. Da Costa, of the Royal Engineers, and Lieut. Dwyer, of the Ceylon Rifles, and for whose detection a reward of 1000l. was offered, was brought on board the Phlegethon steamer, lying off the factories at Canton, and arrived here on the 16th. The Friend of China announces the discovery, that the Chinese Government had been base enough to award honours to this individual after he had been denounced to them by our authorities.

The intelligence from the Cape of Good Hope places affairs on the frontier upon a footing very little improved. A large force of her Majesty's soldiers, and the levies recently raised, under the command of Colonel Mackinnon, ordered to throw supplies into the distant posts of Forts Cox and White, had effected the service, one of considerable importance to future operations. "This force moved into the heart of the enemy's country, yet he did not attempt to interrupt the advance, although in the column was a large convoy of waggons. He, however, made a spirited attack upon the rear of the column on the Debe Neck, which was promptly repulsed by the fire of musketry, and some well-directed shrapnell-shells, which caused the enemy loss."

CASUALTIES BY DEATH IN THE ARMIES OF INDIA REPORTED SINCE OUR LAST PUBLICATION.

H.M.'S TROOPS.—Maj. gen. Sir D. Hill, K.C.B. at Umballah, Feb. 21; Lieut. gen. Sir J. Macleod, C.B. and K.C.H. in Montague-street, Portman-square, April 3.

BENGAL.—Capt. J. D. Cunningham, of the eng. at Umballah, Feb. 28; Lieut. col. D. Hepburn, 29th N.I. at Plymouth, Devon, aged 64, April 11; Surg. J. T. Pearson, at Barrackpore, March 5.

BOMBAY.—Surg. Fraser, 6th N.I. at Bombay, March 14; Capt. G. I. D. Milne, of the Bombay army, at Waal, near Aden, March 3.

BENGAL. THE RAILWAY.

Major Kennedy and Mr. Turnbull have returned from their survey of the line from Rajmahal to the Soane, with an impression that the straight line to Mirzapore through the hills of Behar is not the most advisable. They are reported to contemplate a line differing in some measure both from that which was proposed by the East-India Railway Company and that of the Great Western. The latter proposed to carry the rail from Calcutta to Chagda, then to cross the Hooghly by a bridge, and run up to the Ganges, and skirt its southern bank to Patna, and then to cross that river to Hadjeeppore, and continue the line to Benares and Allahabad. The other company, to whom the contract has now been given, preferred the direct line from the metropolis to Mirzapore. That portion of their line which extends from Howrah to the Collieries has already obtained the sanction of Government both here and in England, and will be prosecuted without delay. To the continuation of the line from that point to Mirzapore, there are now said to be the most serious engineering difficulties. The Dunwah pass presents an elevation of more than 1,000 feet, and the construction of the rail through that district of hills would entail a fearful expenditure, both in the original operations, and in the subsequent working of the line. It would also involve a very considerable loss of time. It is, moreover, found that the Soane, which is between two and three miles wide at the point where it would be intersected by the rail, in the direct line to Mirzapore, is less than a mile wide near its junction with the Ganges. It has, therefore, been suggested to continue the present line to some point near Boodbodd, about twenty miles west of Burdwan, and then to run the main line through Beerbhoom at the eastern base of the hills to Rajmahal, and continue it from that point along the right bank of the Ganges to Mirzapore. It was part of the plan embraced by the direct route to construct branch lines to Rajmahal, Patna, and Benares. But it is probable that the whole length of the trunk to Mirzapore and these branches, would be equal to the line which has been now projected first to the Collieries, and then from Boodbodd to the Ganges and along its valley to Mirzapore; at the same time the terrific passes, which appear to present the most formidable of all obstacles, would be avoided. When all these circumstances are taken into consideration, it is by no means improbable that the home authorities may be induced to sanction the route we have now described, although a more minute survey of the ground may yet suggest farther modifications of it. As regards the opinion which we have hitherto expressed on the subject of the direct line from Calcutta to Mirzapore, it is sufficient to say that it was adopted on the only surveys then existing, and which then formed our only basis of calculation, and that it was supported both by Mr. Stephenson and Mr. Simms. At the very outset of this discussion, five years ago, we gave our vote for the direct line, as the "nearest practical route from Calcutta to Mirzapore." If a more minute and circumstantial survey of that line has presented difficulties which were not at first appreciated, and have shown that another route from that great mart to the port of Calcutta is more practicable and less expensive, we submit at once to the decision of the engineers.—Friend of India, Feb. 27.

The Hurkaru informs us that an address has been drawn up to the Queen by the natives, and is now circulated for signatures. It is written in three languages, and is intended to express the gratitude of her Majesty's most loyal subjects for the inestimable benefit which is to be conferred on them by the establishment of the rail.

FESTIVITIES AT LUCKNOW.

The Hurkaru gives the following account of the doings at Lucknow, on the occasion of the visit of Lord Grosvenor, Mr. Egerton, and Mr. Leveson Gower to that capital, contained in a letter, dated 19th February:—"Cards of invitation were issued by the king to all the residents and visitors at Lucknow to breakfast, at the Shahmunzil palace, and dinner at the Baraduree of the Furhatbuksh palace, on the 17th. After breakfast, we all walked out into a large open verandah looking down upon the river Goomtee, which runs directly under the Shahmunzil palace, and from which we were to witness some of the grand tamashah of the day, consisting of fights of all kinds, between elephants, antelopes, rams, birds, wrestlers, &c. After all the above had been got through, and the four elephants, which were let loose, had shaken each other well, two turned tail and gave the other to understand, by certain signs, that they had done and had quite enough, and walked off as fast as they could possibly move away. We were then warned to proceed into another verandah, which joined a large terrace surrounding a court yard, in the middle of which stood a buffalo calf; and in another moment a large tiger, fearfully savage from hunger, bounded into the yard from the cage, which opened into the yard, and in another instant, with one spring, he was at the side of the calf—a stroke, and the creature was down, with the fangs of the tiger reeking in its neck, and to which the beast kept fixed till he had sucked his full! He then relaxed his hold, and looked upwards to the hundreds of spectators collected all round the yard, on the terraces and in the verandahs (three deep) closed in with rails, in one of which sat the king, princes, nobles, Col. and Mrs. Sleeman, Lord Grosvenor, his cousins and other grandees. After the beast had given a full view of his blood-stained visage, he seized on his victim again, and tried to get it into his den. Then a large door was opened, and in rushed the mother of the calf. In an instant it charged the tiger, who, with one hollow growl, sneaked into a corner, the buffalo charging on, the tiger bounding away, till caught against the large horns of the buffalo; then a crush, a growl, and another bound to the other end of the yard, till, worked up to fury, it sprang on the buffalo, and caught her on the back, but, before it could fix its teeth in, to the utter surprise of the spectators, up got the poor calf, and, though reeling from loss of blood, charged to the rescue, and fairly beat off the tiger from its mother, and, not satisfied with this, went on charging the (now cowed) tiger, who kept sneaking from one side of the yard to the other, till they opened two other cages, and in came two fresh tigers, one of which began by making an attack on the tiger, whom he soon rolled over on his back; the other turned to the buffalos, but, alas for the royal tiger, the whole three at last got fairly beaten and sorely bruised by the wounded mother and well-bled calf! Then followed the horse fight; but I will say no more of his, but bid you adjourn into the hall of audience, where a crowd were assembled to receive from the hands of the king a garland of silver. Each lady advanced, supported by a gentleman, to where the king stood. Then Capt. Bird received her on his arm; the garland was thrown over her arm; she bowed and backed a pace; then her partner received her, over his neck, bowed, backed, took the lady on his arm again, and got through the crowd the best way he could. After this ceremony of presentation was got through, we passed through another hall, where stood the eldest son of the king, surrounded by nobles and attendants. This Prince anointed the guests' pocket-handkerchiefs with attar, and we returned to our conveyances through the gardens, the fountains playing on each side of us. The King and his son had round the neck and arms strings of the largest pearls, emeralds, and rubies that could be found; indeed, if one may use the term, they were a mass of magnificence—though there was a terrible want of order in the arrangement of all this splendour, which robbed it of perfect effect. Now for the dinner. The King sat at the table, with Col. S. on his right, and Lord G. on his left. The refreshment, of which the King partook, was put into his spoon by an attendant, who stood at the side of his chair of state, and the King then passed it into his mouth, with his own hand. Col. S. then rose, and gave 'the Queen,' which was drunk with cheers by her zealous subjects collected in this little spot; then followed the health of 'the King,' which was also done honour to, and thus ended the dinner.

We all rose then, and followed into a verandah, from whence we looked upon a scene of fireworks, stars, wheels, elephants, birds, temples, rockets, blue lights, &c., &c. We returned into the palace, passed through the throne room into the staircase hall, and the same ceremony of presentation to the King (aided this time by our worthy resident Col. S.) took place, and we again received a garland of silver tissue and tinsel woven into stars and chains, about a yard and a half long, round ladies' arms, and gentlemen's necks; back again to the entrance, where the Prince had taken up his position to present us with another overpowering supply of attar, not quite of the rose kind; and we then bid adieu to halls and palaces, and returned to our bungalows of comfort."

CONSPIRACY IN NEPAUL.

The Citizen supplied some information regarding a projected revolt in Nepaul, which we are enabled to confirm from private intelligence, and to give a few additional items. A plot was laid by Budrikar Singh, the brother of Jung Bahadoor, General Jaie Bahadoor his cousin, the Mohila Sahib, the Maharajah's brother, and Kuryee Kurban Khetree, who accompanied the minister to England, and it was to have been carried into execution at a sporting party. The original mover of the conspiracy was Kuryee Kurban Khetree, a furious bigot, who endeavoured to prejudice the minds of the soldiery against the minister, by declaring that he had drunk wine in England, which is a gross falsehood, as Jung Bahadoor, while absent from Nepaul, was strict to punctiliousness on the subject of his diet. To avenge this slander, Jung Bahadoor poured down the throat of Kurban Khetree, a quantity of liquor, prepared by the soldiers, in the presence of all the troops. The night before the assassination was to have been perpetrated, Jung Bahadoor's elder brother, the former minister, sent him intelligence of the conspiracy; the conspirators were arrested, and Jung Bahadoor coolly rode off to chat with the resident about the occurrence. The cause of the defection of the minister's brother is not known, but it is supposed he was gained over by other parties. The reason for proposing to murder Jung Bahadoor was, that the troops positively refused to draw a sword against his party while he continued to live, although many of their officers are hostile to his person. The rebels will in all probability lose their heads, as Jung Bahadoor never spares; but the only chance of overturning his power, viz. by declaring him an outcast on account of his European voyage, has been lost, and Jung is triumphant.—Friend of India, March 6.

The accuracy of the following intelligence from Nepaul may be relied upon:—

An attempt at a change of ministry more Nepalico has been just detected. The plot was to murder Jung Bahadoor on his way to Durbar, but intimation of the intended coup d'état was conveyed to Jung during the night by his brother Bung, the late minister. Steps were immediately taken to defeat the machinations of the conspirators, the principal of whom were arrested on the following day, and confessed their guilt. Their names are, Mahil, a Sahib, brother of the Maharaj General Budreehur Sing, own brother to Jung, General Jay Bahadoor, his cousin, and Khanjee Khuttree, lately returned with him from England. Overtures were made to seduce the troops from their fidelity, but without effect, and the affair seems to be at an end. It had been known for some days that General Jay was plotting something, but Budreehur was not suspected of being implicated. It is said that the party returned from England had been spreading all sorts of reports about Nepaul prejudicial to General Jay, which was the cause of his hatching this conspiracy.—Bombay Telegraph, March 17.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL of Jan. the 24th, arrived at Calcutta on March the 5th, per Haddington.

FORT WILLIAM COLLEGE.—A notice has been hung up on the walls of Fort William College, intimating that the services of the old moulvies and pundits, unacquainted with the English language, will be dispensed with, and properly qualified ones substituted. A moulvie capable of passing an examination in English, Arabic, Persian, and Oordoo, will be employed on a salary of Rs. 100, and a pundit able to pass in English, Bengali, and Sanscrit, will be engaged on a salary little short of that sum.—Sumbad Russosagur.

THE AGRA BANK.—In reference to the assertion made by Mr. Stowell, that Rs. 75,000 had been withdrawn from the reserve fund of the Agra Bank, to meet deficiencies, a memorandum has been sent round by the secretary with this explanation;—"Amount written off, being certain losses prominently noticed as likely to occur in the Director's Report of the 13th August, 1849, Rs. 107,699-3-4. Deduct amount of recoveries, Rs. 32,627-13-8. Actual amount of deficiency, Rs. 75,071-5-8. We fully concur in the opinion of the Citizen that such losses should be deducted from the succeeding dividend, and not from the reserve fund, which should be held sacred, and that no such entry should be allowed, without a special and prominent notice of it, or without the distinct, not indirect—sanction of a public meeting.—Friend of India, Feb. 27.

A SKIRMISH occurred, at no great distance from Mitenkot, between the party of the 3rd Rissla (probably a detachment of Capt. Prendergast's Punjab cavalry), posted at Sungur, and a party of Belooch cattle lifters, who got the worst of it, and were obliged to fly, leaving their booty behind them.—Lahore Chron. Mar. 5.

LAHORE.—A letter from Lahore, dated 26th February, says:—"There was another attempt to enter the magazine for the purpose of blowing us all up, discovered yesterday morning by the havildar relieving guard: a large hole was found in the outer wall, and all the sentries on guard are in quod."

MOOLTAN.—A letter from Mooltan states, that nothing is yet known regarding the fate of the fort and magazine. The latter is at present on a very inefficient footing, not even supplying the corps at the station, and report has it that it will be removed to Jelum, a change which cannot occur this year.

SUSPECTED INCENDIARISM.—The ship Buckinghamshire, of 1,700 tons, one of the East India Company's old vessels, was entirely destroyed by fire just below Diamond Harbour, on the night of the 3rd March. She was on her way to England, and had a large party of invalid soldiers on board. All hands, passengers and crew, were saved, except two of the invalids, who leaped overboard and were drowned. The cause of the catastrophe has not been ascertained, but as a large portion of the crew were lascars, there is a suspicion of incendiarism. A subscription had been set on foot in Calcutta to relieve the losses of the more needy sufferers. The ship and cargo had been insured for 88,000*l*.

THE COMMISSARIAT.—The Government have decided upon making an entire change in the arrangement of the Commissariat, and we believe that the composition of the department will undergo considerable modifications as well. There is a strong desire on the part of the supreme authority to make root-and-branch work of it, and though it may be found impracticable to give the Commissariat, under any circumstances, a good name, we may pretty safely conclude, that the days which were so prosperous to the "Jotee Pershads," and the "lucky Lieut. Colonels," have passed away. Of the incapacity of the department to guard the public purse we have had ample proof, and there is enough of damage to the national reputation, in the mere scandal of reports which affect, unjustly, no doubt, the reputation of British officers, to justify our rulers in trying to introduce a new system.—Delhi Gaz.

THE GREAT FALL OF RAIN, which has occurred in the upper provinces, is expected to make the present crop unusually productive, and the grain markets are already falling rapidly. This circumstance may, more than any other, conduce to the preservation of tranquillity in our newly-acquired territories.

H.M. 14TH LIGHT DRAGOONS were unexpectedly delayed on their route, by a rise of the Jumna, consequent on the late heavy rains: they were expected at Meerut on the 7th March.

LIEUT.-COL. T. M. TAYLOR, who has but lately returned from England, and is now at the Presidency, contemplates retiring from the service on receipt of a bonus. Lieut.-Col. T. was for some years a member of the Military Board, the duties of which appointment he fulfilled with credit to himself and satisfaction to Government.—Morning Chronicle, March 1.

HYDERABAD.—Our correspondent writes:—"In his last conference with the Nizam, the Resident proposed an important measure, the report of which has but now got abroad from a rather authentic source. The Resident proposed that, to bring home the entire revenues of the Nizam unimpaired by the defalcations of the intermediate agents of the government, four English gentlemen should be appointed to the provinces to supervise his financial concerns. The Nizam appearing to demur, the Resident, to remove the objection which he supposed existed prominently in his Highness's mind, suggested that his Highness might himself nominate to the office. This was nugatory to all intents and purposes. His Highness has no communication with English persons; and had the offer been accepted, its effect could only have been to divest the Government of India of the patronage of the appointments, and to place it in the hands of the Resident, ostensibly as the agent of the Nizam. When the contingent was first formed, it was theoretically considered so entirely the Nizam's, that the Government of India had no voice in the arrangements made for it, which as well as the appointments of its officers were under the direction of the Resident, acting as the agent of the Nizam. The fiction of the Nizam's authority over this force soon became apparent. The force grew into importance from its magnitude, and a numerous employment of English officers. The patronage which at first remained entirely with the Resident was next shared with him by the Government, which at last became possessed of it entirely, and deprived the Nizam even of the name of authority over this portion of his troops.—Englishman, March 7.

ATTAINMENTS IN URDU.—The Honourable the Deputy-Governor has been pleased to confer a degree of honour on Lieut. E. St. George, of the 1st European Fusiliers, for his eminent attainments in the Urdu language.

SCRIPTIONS.—The Mofussilite records a fact in connection with the East-India United Service Club, which is an amusing exemplification of one of the peculiarities of Indian Society. Out of 900 nominal subscribers, only 80 pay up the subscription of one rupee per mensem. We know of nothing which reflects such discredit upon the Anglo-Indian community, as the extreme readiness with which they put their names to subscription lists, and the extreme neglect with which they treat their own promises. It is not that they are either unwilling or unable to pay, but they are the victims of that laziness and procrastination which destroys all energy in this climate.—Friend of India.

MR. ARATHOON, the Armenian gentleman forcibly carried off from Chandernagore and arrested on the river, was released on the 20th February, the Chief Justice virtually admitting his error in remanding the prisoner on a detainer, after declaring the original arrest illegal.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S TRAVELLING CHARGES.—The Englishman last week published a statement of the annual travelling charges of the Governor-General for the last six years, thus:—

1845-46	Co.'s Rs.	750,000
1846-47	461,000
1847-48	273,000
1848-49	409,000
1849-50	550,000
1850-51	400,000

"The first year includes presents made to native princes, &c."

KOHAT.—Extract of a letter, dated 28th February:—"The valley is becoming the loveliest spot I ever saw in the East. The crops are rising, being now a foot high. The weeping willows are budding out leaves, and in a few days the mulberry-trees, peach-orchards, and vineyards, will be in leaf and blossom. There are numerous mountain streams running through the valley, as also a stream rising from natural springs close to Kohat, which has the clearest water I ever saw, and there are fish in it; the banks are amply furnished with water-cress, which we munch, and think of England every mouthful we take. The Dhoomba sheep from Cabul are equal to any Welch mutton, and they do not require gram, but feed on the hill-side near us; in short, we are very well off, and this would be a pleasant life enough were it not that we are shut out from society."

CANPORE BANK.—The Mofussilite publishes a statement of the affairs of the Cawnpore Bank, from which it appears that although the Directors of that Institution are engaged in winding up its affairs, still the sum of rupees 40,063 has been obtained in excess of the expenses during the year 1850. Since the determination of the proprietors to close the bank altogether was announced, four instalments of the remaining half of the capital, amounting in all to Rs. 425 out of Rs. 500, have been paid to the proprietors, and the remaining Rs. 75 seem in a fair process of realization. The bank establishment is to be discharged on the 1st of March with a donation of two months' salary.

ADMIRAL AUSTEN AND GOVERNMENT-HOUSE.—The Naval Commander-in-Chief in the Eastern Seas having arrived on a visit to Calcutta in H. M. S. Hastings, Sir John Littler sent his military secretary to receive him, and the following is the report of Capt. Colebrooke's address to his Excellency, as narrated in the Englishman:—"Admiral Austen, I am desired by Sir John Littler to express his regret that, owing to his own private residence being under repairs, he cannot offer your Excellency the accommodation he would wish. I am further desired to inform you that Government-house in the Fort, being likewise under repairs, cannot be placed at your disposal; and that in consequence of the stringent orders of the Governor-General, forbidding Government-house at Calcutta being inhabited by any one save the Governor for the time being, his Honour is prevented offering you the accommodation there, which he otherwise would have had great pleasure in doing." Sir John Littler was placed in a very delicate and disagreeable position. His own private residence is under repair; the two public residences of the head of the government in Calcutta are the great house, on which Lord Wellesley expended fourteen lacs of rupees of the public money—for which act of magnificence he was visited with the censure of the Court of Directors—and the Government-house in the Fort. The latter is now also under repairs, and the former, after the very unpleasant discussion at the beginning of last year, could not be considered available. These difficulties were explained to the Admiral, and he proceeded to take up his residence at Spence's Hotel, promising at the same time to accept of Sir John's invitation to Barrackpore in the course of the week.—Friend of India, March 6.

THE CANAL DEPARTMENT.—We believe the Government have put Lieut.-Col. Cauley and the canal department in an awkward position; the "passing order" enjoins an acquaintance with the native languages as an indispensable qualification for staff employment, but Col. Cauley finds that the knowledge of engineering is, of the two requisites, far more essential than a thorough acquaintance with the Bagh-o-Bahar. Some of his best assistants have not passed at all, and others can only hope to have their names inserted in a postscript to general orders, whereupon the question arises, whether the man who knows nothing of canals, but a good deal of literature, shall be counted more efficient in the department than those who can merely construct roads and water-courses? There is not much doubt as to how the difficulty will be solved, and we may congratulate ourselves on the strength of the necessity, which compels a modification of the order, since otherwise, nothing short of a letter of recommendation from noble friends might be allowed to avail the man who lacks the gift to acquire a language at three months' notice. We are far from undervaluing the faculty to converse and write in Hindoostani to the satisfaction of a committee, but should be very sorry to see it insisted upon in every case of staff employment. In making the required concession to the department of public works, Government will no doubt take care that the precedent shall not be too widely extended, or needlessly acted upon.—Delhi Gazette.

MAJOR GENERAL SIR DUDLEY ST. LEGER HILL, K.C.B., and Colonel of H.M.'s 50th Foot, commanding the Sirhind division, died of apoplexy at Umballah, on the 21st February. Sir Dudley had gone into his farm-yard, and, while in his moorghee khana, dropped down dead. He entered the army in August, 1804, as an ensign; obtained his lieutenancy in October, 1805; his captaincy in August, 1810; his majority in April, 1812; his lieutenant-colonelcy in June, 1813; his colonelcy in July, 1830; and attained the rank of major-general in November, 1841. He succeeded to the colonelcy of the 50th Foot in the end of March, 1849. The gallant general, was a Peninsular officer, had been engaged in several general actions on the continent, and had seen much hard service.

THE NORTH-WEST BANK.—One of the mofussil papers contains a report of the proceedings of the annual meeting of the shareholders of the North-West Bank, when the question of Major Angelo's amenability to law having been brought forward, a legal opinion on the subject, furnished by Mr. Theobald, of Calcutta, was read to the meeting, which concluded: "On the whole, I beg to observe,—that I think it due to the shareholders and the public that the directors should very seriously consider whether they will not prosecute Major Angelo, and proceed at once to do so." The accounts exhibit a net divisible surplus of Rs. 1,40,777, equivalent to a dividend of Rs. 9-10-10 upon the paid-up capital of the bank. The discrepancies and the accounts arising through the acts of Major Angelo amount to Rs. 1,12,520, exclusive of interest. The "doubtful assets" of the bank amount to Rs. 4,06,053. The recommendation of the directors that the capital be reduced by 20 per cent., i.e. that the value of shares be reduced from Rs. 500 to Rs. 400, met with the approbation of the meeting. It was admitted, however, that this, along with the other recommendations, could only be acted on under legal advice.

RAJENDRA MITTRA.—The following is an extract from a letter dated Benares, 15th February:—"The ceremony of presenting a khilut to Baboo Rajendra Mittra, an old and respectable resident of the holy city, took place at the house of our commissioner, who, in the absence of the Governor's General's agent, did the honours. The civil functionaries and several staff officers, together with many of the native gentry, assembled at Mr. Reade's house, when a durbar was held; and upon the venerable old Baboo appearing in his new khilut or honorary dress and taking his seat, Mr. Reade delivered a speech explaining the grounds upon which the honour was conferred, and giving a brief sketch of the life of the recipient. Baboo Rajendra Mittra is the son of Warren Hastings' Dewan, and came from Calcutta upwards of 60 years ago, since which his family have resided in the holy city. The family is not very rich, but Rajendra has ever been a liberal contributor to all works of public benefit. He gave Rs. 1,000 towards the new college, and when lately a large strip of land was taken up by Government for the Grand Trunk Road, the Baboo made a present of this valuable property to the state, of his own free will, in consequence of which the khilut was presented to him. Mr. Reade availed himself of this opportunity to pay a well merited compliment to Baboo Deo Narayan Sing, a gentleman whose ancestors rendered good service to Warren Hastings and to the British Government, and who is also liberal in his aid to public undertakings, and was the first person to subscribe to the new college, giving a thousand rupees.—Delhi Gazette, March 8.

CONNECTION OF OFFICERS WITH BANKS.—We hear that an order, prohibiting officers from being concerned in the management of Joint Stock Banks, will positively be issued very soon. The Court of Directors are said to be unanimous as to the necessity for the measure.—Delhi Gaz., March 1.

UNCOVENANTED SERVICE BANK.—This little unpretending bank was established in 1836, by some members of the uncovenanted service at Agra, with the view of providing a safe and profitable deposit for the small savings of the prudent thrifty. Its funds have gradually increased, till its operations embrace a sum of about Rs. 70,000, including a capital of about Rs. 24,000. It grants loans at twelve per cent., on two or more approved securities, repayable in various periods, extending from six months to two years, according to the magnitude of the transaction. Its capital stock is fixed at Rs. 30,000, which is divided into 600 shares at Rs. 50 each. It has five directors, one of whom receives Rs. 100 a month, and a secretary, whose allowance we are unable to learn. It is a small institution, but what it wants in size is made up in honesty and candour. It has no "fictitious or unpaid stock. None of the bank's scrip does duty for assets. The whole of the reserve fund is vested in real government securities. None of its office-holders has any debit. There are no hopeless dues." The bank has, moreover, learnt wisdom from the misfortunes of its neighbours. "Unfortunately the name of banker, whether descriptive of secretary, trustee, or director, has, through the rascalities practised elsewhere, become so questionable, that we beg there may not be the least delicacy shown in scrutinizing its affairs." "The whole establishment are the servants of the secretary; the directors are mere judges of securities in the cases he puts before them. Commercial principles are raised as a screen behind which he entrenches himself, though occasionally a couple of shabbily paid auditors are allowed a limited peep, and thus questionable transactions are effectually concealed. Then may follow bad debts, losses and frauds, by figments of account, all figuring as good assets,—while the capital dwindles away in dividends. A little light breaks at last into the crazy edifice, dishonest directors discover their own danger, and try to sell out; the secretary stands a rogue confessed; notice to pay off overgrown deposits is received—and the crowd of befooled shareholders have to await a crash."

THE UNION BANK IN LIQUIDATION.—The report of the auditors of this unfortunate institution, just published, embraces the transactions of three years, but it has failed to give any satisfaction to any party. The same mystification which brought the bank to the ground, and ruined its proprietors, appears, by a kind of fatality, still to cling to it, and shroud even its lifeless carcase from public scrutiny. Thus, we are informed that the total amount of outstanding liabilities of the bank, at the date of its suspension in January, 1848, was Rs. 66,44,965. The total amount of assessment received up to December, 1850, in cash or securities, was Rs. 33,07,848, and the total amount of assessment in default was Rs. 17,20,431. Putting these two items together, we naturally conclude that the sum which was levied by assessment on the shareholders to meet the demands on the bank amounted to Rs. 52,28,279, which is more than fourteen lacs of rupees short of the sum said to have been actually due to the creditors of the bank. Is this additional sum to be made good by a second assessment, or are we to suppose that the difference between these two sums has been paid off from the assets? What, moreover, is understood by the enigmatical expression, "The amount otherwise adjusted, nineteen lacs." Is this sum an addition to the outstanding liabilities of the bank of sixty-six lacs, or is it a portion of those liabilities which has been paid off from some other source than that of the assessment? If so, from what funds has this adjustment been made? The statement given above is so meagre, dark, and unintelligible, that we trust the executive committee will perceive the necessity of affording such explanations as shall enable the unfortunate shareholders to understand their real position.—Friend of India, March 6.

APPLICATION FOR LEAVE OF ABSENCE.—A case of considerable importance to officers proceeding to Europe via Bombay, has lately been brought to our notice, and for the benefit of those who may be contemplating a trip in that direction, we give the subject all the publicity in our power. An officer in a regiment stationed in the Punjab, applied for leave to Bombay, preparatory to applying for leave to Europe; the former was granted, and the officer proceeded to Bombay to avail himself of it, having previously secured a cabin in a steamer which was shortly to start for Suez. On his arrival at Bombay, our friend, after minutely examining all regulations on the subject, without discovering anything to check his mode of proceeding, sent in his application for furlough to the Bombay Government, and, under the impression that he had done all that was officially necessary, sent his baggage on board the steamer in which his passage was taken, but to his dismay information was forwarded to the effect, that the Bombay Government had been strictly prohibited from granting furlough to Bengal officers, and that the only course left was for him to apply to the Government of Bengal. Of course there was no alternative, but the disappointment and inconvenience officers are subjected to in consequence of such regulations is obvious, and as we suppose there is no intention on the part of Government to alter them, we give prominent insertion to the above. We are told that the case in point is by no means singular; few think it necessary to assure themselves of the fact that their leave depends only on the Bengal Government, and almost every "Bengalee" goes to Bombay under the impression that the necessary leave can be as easily obtained there as in his own presidency: the consequence is at least a detention of from six weeks to two months, however urgent the case may be. We have heard of one officer who, from ignorance of this rule, actually went on board the steamer at Bombay, and proceeded to England without leave. We are curious to see how he will get out of the scrape into which he has so unwittingly fallen. It is to be hoped some consideration will be shown for an error committed wholly through ignorance of what Government have not been at the trouble to teach their officers.—Hurkaru.

EFFECTS OF EXTRAVAGANCE.—In our obituary of to-day, many of our readers will recognize the name of an unfortunate, whose fate furnishes a melancholy and memorable example of the inevitable consequences to military men of want of principle and misconduct in money matters. The son of a Bengal civilian, and highly connected, Mr. W. was ushered into the world with the advantages of a first-rate education, and possessed of qualities and acquirements that might have placed him in a position of great respectability in an honourable profession, and ensured his success in life. From his first entrance into the army, however, he lived far beyond his income, indulged in every extravagance, and speedily became unscrupulous as to the means and expedients by which he recruited his resources. Difficulties and embarrassments followed, and these were succeeded by complaints and reports injurious to his reputation. Several warnings and escapes from the natural consequences of his misconduct failed to effect any amendment in his mode of life, and at length he was overwhelmed by an accumulation of charges that would have proved fatal to fifty commissions. This occurred some three years ago. Since his dismissal from the service, his life has been one of wretchedness and destitution. Unable or unwilling to earn a decent livelihood, he had subsisted solely by eleemosynary contributions, which, lost to all self-respect, he levied by a system of begging letters, addressed alike to strangers and to individuals whom he had formerly known. Latterly, the sense of misery was dulled by habits of intemperance; disease succeeded, and at length, broken in constitution, imbecile in mind, and paralytic in body, this unhappy man died a pauper in a hospital into which he was admitted out of charity. Such a career as we have sketched should be a most impressive warning, to the young and the thoughtless in the army, of the results of early extravagance. It may be truly said that, in this country, at least, a sentence of dismissal from the service is in many, if not the majority of cases, tantamount to sentence of death.—Mofussilite, Feb. 18.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

WITHDRAWAL OF OFFICERS FROM THEIR REGIMENTS.

Camp, Jubbee, Feb. 10, 1851.—The most noble the Governor-General is pleased to publish the following paragraphs of a military despatch from the Honourable the Court of Directors, No. 130, dated 27th November, 1850.

Para. 10. "The Commander-in-Chief has referred to the additional number of officers withdrawn from regiments consequent on the annexation of the Punjab, and has observed that, under such circumstances, it does not appear possible to confine the withdrawal of officers from their regiments, for staff employ, to the limit laid down by us.

11. "We have always admitted that, under present circumstances, the number of officers on detached employment at your presidency necessarily exceeds the limit of five per regiment; but, we do not consider that it is necessary to exceed the limit as regards officers of the rank of captain. That limit was first fixed at two per regiment; since which we have added one captain to each regiment of cavalry and infantry, for the express purpose of meeting the additional drain for the staff. The limit may now therefore be considered to be three captains per regt., and we expect that it will not be exceeded without an absolute necessity, the particulars of which are to be specially communicated to us."

The Governor-General is pleased to direct that, hereafter, the number of officers permitted to be withdrawn for staff and detached employment shall be considered to be three captains and three subalterns per regiment of the line.

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR DUDLEY HILL, K.C.B.

Head Quarters, Camp Chatta, Feb. 25, 1851.—The Commander-in-Chief announces to the troops, with deep concern, the sudden demise of Major-General Sir Dudley Hill, K.C.B., while holding the command of the Sirhind division of the army.

This melancholy event took place at Umballah, on the 21st instant.

In Sir Dudley Hill her Majesty loses the services of a general officer who has contributed zealously to sustain the honour of her Majesty's arms on many a well fought field in Portugal and Spain: and the united armies of Bengal lose one who has ever shown himself anxious to promote their joint interests, and to discharge his duty towards them as became the promise of his early military career.

The Commander-in-Chief mourns the loss of an old and valued friend and brother in arms.

COLONEL G. JERVIS.

The professional ability and zeal of Colonel Jervis, who for seven years has most efficiently filled the office of chief engineer, have been conspicuous during his long and meritorious career of nearly forty years, and in bringing the name of Colonel Jervis prominently to the notice of the Honourable the Court of Directors, the Right Honourable the Governor in Council will point in particular to his exertions in the cause of native education, and in the training of native youths specially for the scientific service of the Government.

COURT-MARTIAL.

CAPTAIN CHRISTOPHER HASSELL, 48TH N.I.

Head Quarters, Camp Goorkumundee, Feb. 13, 1851.—At a general court-martial assembled at Cawnpore, Dec. 9, 1850, Capt. C. Hasell, 48th N.I., was arraigned on the following charge:—

For highly insubordinate conduct, and direct disregard of the orders of H. Ex. the C.-in-C., conveyed in a letter from the adj.-gen. of the army, dated Oct. 21, 1850 (in which, with reference to letters written by him on Aug. 31 and Sept. 27, 1850, he was prohibited from reagitating matters of complaint which he had already been and was now again desired to consider as finally settled), in having, at Bandah, on Oct. 28, 1850, on hearing the adj.-gen.'s letter read, remarked that he had no redress—or used words to that effect; and in having then disrespectfully stated to Major C. Troup, his commanding officer, that his character had been falsely aspersed by him, Major Troup.

Finding.—Guilty.

Sentence.—To be suspended from rank, pay, and allowances for the period of seven calendar months.

Revised Sentence.—To be suspended from rank, pay, and allowances for a period of six calendar months.

Approved and confirmed. (Signed)

W. M. GOMM, General, C.-in-C.

Head Quarters, Camp, Agra, Feb. 8, 1851.

Remarks by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

I consider the Court to have exercised a very sound discretion in the peremptory opposition presented to the introduction of matter extraneous to the charge into their deliberations, whether on the part of the prosecution or defence.

The sentence of suspension passed upon Capt. C. Hasell is to be reckoned from Dec. 21, 1850.

Captain Hasell will continue in arrest.

MADRAS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

HOUSES FOR THE POOR.—The Madras Athenæum notices the establishment of a society in Madras, intended to provide the poorer classes of the community with houses of a better description than they could otherwise procure, at a low rate. It is called the Madras Provident Society, and the number of members is limited to 200. The subscription to the society is eight rupees a month.

THE GORHAM CONTROVERSY.—The Madras Spectator publishes the subjoined reply from the Archbishop of Canterbury to the address transmitted to him by the bishop and clergy of Madras:—"I beg to return my grateful thanks to your lordship and your clergy, for the kindness manifested in the address which you have forwarded to me, approving of my conduct in the case recently brought before the Court of Appeal in England. On a subject which has occasioned so much dissension in our church, and needlessly, as I must think, brought forward for agitation, it is gratifying to receive an assurance from a body of clergy such as those who have addressed me, that they do not consider the exclusive view of baptismal regeneration, which an endeavour has been made to maintain, to be a doctrine warranted by our articles and formularies, or designed by those who framed them. Your lordship and your clergy may be assured of my earnest hope and prayer that the Great Head of the church may be pleased to give success to your united efforts towards diffusing the blessings of the gospel, in that distant part of our empire to which his providence has called you."

THE EAST-INDIA FISHERY, lately established at this presidency, is said to bid fair to become a profitable source of employment to numbers who would otherwise be reduced to depend solely on the chances of a Government clerkship for their daily bread.

THE LATE GOVERNOR OF PONDICHERY.—The Moniteur Officiel of Pondicherry, of the 21st February, notices the interment in one tomb, on the 14th, of the bodies of the late Governor, M. Lalande de Calan, and one of his daughters, a girl scarcely six years of age. The body of the Governor was removed to the ground where the new parish church is to be built, and before the day fixed for the reinterment his daughter was carried off by a painful malady. The scene at the funeral is described as most affecting—a requiem was sung, and the numerous mourners each cast a handful of earth into the grave.

PUBLIC WORKS.—A commission to inquire into the state of public works at this presidency has been nominated by Government, consisting of Major Balfour, of the artillery, Mr. Bourdillon, of the civil service, and Captain F. Cotton, of the engineers. The committee are not expected to report what new works are necessary, or what old ones require to be improved, but are merely to examine the details of the civil engineer department.—Athenaeum, March 13.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF, Sir George Berkeley, has had a rather severe attack of illness during the past month. His Excellency is now, we are happy to state, almost perfectly recovered; but intends leaving India very shortly. He has applied, we are told, to be relieved about June next.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

SURGEON-GENERAL DONALD SMITH YOUNG, F.R.C.S.

Fort St. George, Feb. 25, 1851.—No. 38 of 1851.—Adverting to G. O. G., No. 25, of the 11th February, 1851, and to the permission therein granted to Surgeon-General Donald Smith Young, F.R.C.S., to retire from the service, the Right Honourable the Governor in Council takes the occasion to place on record the high sense which is entertained by the Madras Government of Mr. Young's zealous and able services during the long period of thirty-six years, and which have obtained for him the invariable approbation of his superiors.

During many years of active employment in the field, Mr. Young was conspicuous for his energetic and able discharge of his duties, and at the siege of Singhur especially his humane exertions in rendering assistance to the wounded of the enemy were honourably noticed.

These sentiments of Government will be specially communicated to the Honourable the Court of Directors.

OFF-RECKONINGS.

The Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to direct the publication of the following statement of the proportion of Off-Reckonings payable in England and India, to colonels of regiments and other officers, on account of their shares in the Off-Reckoning Fund of the year 1850. The Accountant-General will adopt the requisite measures for the discharge of the sums payable in India:—
